Peterson trial: Defense attorneys prodded Scott Peterson's one-time mistress about wiretapped calls between her and the former fertilizer salesman accused of murder, implying she did not fully cooperate with police.

At the trial in Redwood City, Calif., defense attorney Mark Geragos also attempted to portray Amber Frey as a calculated seductress and liar who was more obsessed with Peterson than he was with her.

According to police reports, authorities were suspicious that Frey may not have been taping all of her calls with Peterson or may have neglected to turn over some tapes, Geragos noted during the cross-examination Monday.

Michael Jackson case: After testimony from a dozen key witnesses in the Michael Jackson child molestation case, the judge issued tentative rulings on evidence seized in a search of Jackson's Neverland estate.

Superior Court Judge Rodney Melville said Monday in Santa Maria, Calif., he was inclined to admit 39 pieces of evidence and is "concerned" about at least a dozen other items that he may order suppressed.

Abortion clinic bombing: A federal judge in Birmingham, Ala., on Monday gave attorneys for alleged serial bomber Eric Rudolph more time to draft a plan for fighting charges in a fatal attack on an abortion clinic.

U.S. District Judge Lynwood Smith gave Rudolph's legal team until Sept. 15 to reveal their defense against charges that Rudolph planted a bomb outside a Birmingham women's clinic on Jan. 29, 1988, killing a police officer and critically injuring a nurse.

Florida slayings: A grand jury has indicted four men for the grisly slayings of six people in a Florida home, and the state prosecutor planned to seek the death penalty.

The alleged ringleader, Troy Victorino, 27, and Hunter Cannon, Michael Salas and Jerome Hunter, all 18, were charged with first-degree murder, conspiracy to commit murder, abuse of a dead body with a weapon and armed burglary. State Attorney John Tanner said he will seek the death penalty for all the defendants.

Police said the killings were the culmination of an argument between Victorino and one of the victims, Erin Belanger, 22, over an X-Box video game system and clothes owned by Victorino.

Porn HIV scare: A California state assemblyman has asked the adult entertainment industry of West Hollywood to adopt safe-sex measures or face the possibility of a law that would compel performers to use condoms.

Assemblyman Paul Koretz, chairman of the Labor and Employment Committee, said adult film stars should receive workplace health and safety protections like other Californians.

Koretz's comments follow a recent HIV scare that prompted producers to stop film-

Indonesia Marriott bombing: Two prosecution lawyers talk with Muslim militant Jhoni Hendrawan, alias Idris, center, before the start of his trial Tuesday in Jakarta, Indonesia. An Indonesian court sentenced Hendrawan to 10 years in jail for helping plan last year's J.W. Marriott Hotel bombing, but acquitted him of involvement in the 2002 Bali attacks. The August 2003 attack on the Marriott Hotel in Jakarta killed 12 people, while the bombing of nightclubs on the island of Bali killed 202. At least 10 people have been convicted in the Marriott attack.

Fischer deportation: Japan's Justice Ministry rejected former chess champion Bobby Fischer's demand for protection as a political refugee on Tuesday and issued an order to deport him.

Fischer, detained since July 13 for attempting to travel with an invalid U.S. passport, quickly appealed the decision, and his supporters said he would not be deported immediately.

The former chess great is wanted in the United States for violating international sanctions against Yugoslavia in 1992.

Uzbekistan bombings: Uzbekistan's Supreme Court on Tuesday sentenced 15 al-Qaida-linked Islamic militants to as long as 18 years in prison for a series of bombings that killed at least 47 people earlier this year.

The trial, which opened July 26, was the first against those accused in a series of March and April explosions and assaults on police that killed 33 militants, 10 police and four bystanders.

Other trials are expected with dozens more suspects in custody.

'Scream' theft: As police in Oslo continued their search Tuesday for two stolen Edvard Munch masterpieces, a Norwegian magazine offered a reward for the works' return while a newspaper's front page demanded: "Bandits! Return 'The Scream' and 'Madonna.'"

The city-owned Munch Museum in Oslo reopened at noon Tuesday, two days after three armed robbers, at least one with a gun, snatched the national treasures as stunned visitors watched, and then fled in a stolen car.

Inspector Iver Stensrud of the Oslo police said the investigation was continuing at full force, but that he there were no new developments and no suspects.

Business

Italian airline woes: State carrier Alitalia could be faced with collapse within 20 days without the approval of a restructuring plan that would allow the airline to tap into a loan of $488 million, the company's chairman was quoted as saying in Italian news reports Tuesday.

The reports sent Alitalia shares tumbling 6.9 percent on the Milan market on Tuesday.

Union negotiations: US Airways' pilots union announced that negotiations on pay and benefit cuts broke down Monday, prompting the carrier's executives to ask that their latest proposal be taken directly to the union's leadership for a vote.

The collapse in talks underscores the friction between management and workers as the company seeks to secure $800 million in cuts by the end of September to stave off its second bankruptcy filing in two years. But bringing the proposal to the union's executive council is likely to accelerate the contract process, said Standard & Poor's analyst Philip Bagdaley.

Abuse report lays blame on DOD leadership

BY ROBERT BURNS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. soldiers running the Abu Ghraib prison are mainly to blame for the inmate abuses there, but fault also lies with the Pentagon's most senior civilian and military officials, according to a report released Tuesday by an independent panel of civilian defense experts.

Senior leaders did not establish clear guidelines on permissible techniques for interrogating various categories of prisoners held at Abu Ghraib and elsewhere in Iraq, the report said.

High-level commanders failed to shift resources to an understaffed and ill-trained prison detention unit once it became apparent that the system was out of control, the report said.

The findings were presented at a Pentagon news conference by James Schlesinger, the former secretary of defense who headed a four-person commission created last May by Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld.

"There was chaos at Abu Ghraib," Schlesinger said, and it was due in part to the fact that the prison was a regular target of shelling by an Iraqi insurgency not adequately anticipated by U.S. leaders.

The report said the direct responsibility lay with soldiers and commanders in the field rather than in Washington.

"There was direct responsibility for those activities on the part of the commanders on the scene up to the brigade level, because they did not adequately supervise what was going on at Abu Ghraib," Schlesinger said. "There was indirect responsibility at higher levels, in that the weaknesses at Abu Ghraib were well-known and that corrective action could have been taken and should have been taken."

He said Rumsfeld's office could be faulted for inadequate supervision, but he strongly objected to the suggestion that Rumsfeld should step down from his post.

"His resignation would be a boon to all of America's enemies," Schlesinger said.

Asked later about the culpability of senior military commanders, Schlesinger said "they were not focused on the detention operations," but even so they should not be forced to resign or be punished. He referred specifically to Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, who was the top U.S. commander in Iraq during the period in question.

The mistreatment of prisoners, described by the commission as "acts of brutality and purposeless sadism," would have been avoided with proper training, leadership and oversight, it said.

The commission was particularly critical of Sanchez and other commanders.

"We believe Lt. Gen. Sanchez should have taken stronger action in November when he realized the extent of the leadership problems at Abu Ghraib," the report said. It concluded that he "failed to ensure proper staff oversight" of detention and interrogation operations.

The commission made no recommendations about disciplinary action against any civilian or military officials.

Iraqi troops working to seal Najaf shrine

The Associated Press

NAJAF, Iraq — Iraqi forces moved into position hundreds of yards from the revered Imam Ali Shrine on Tuesday as Iraq's defense minister once again demanded insurgents inside surrender or face a violent raid.

The militant force, which once waged fierce battles with U.S. troops throughout the Old City and Najaf's vast cemetery, appeared far weaker Tuesday after days of U.S. airstrikes and relentless pounding.

Hundreds of insurgents have been spotted leaving the city in recent days, witnesses said. Those that remained appeared to have pulled back to the area around the shrine, where the fighting Tuesday was concentrated, U.S. troops said.

U.S. warplanes bombed the Old City late Tuesday for the third night in a row, witnesses reported. Huge blasts rang throughout the city for about 10 minutes followed by gunbattles and smaller explosions.

Earlier in the day, fierce fighting broke out near the shrine compound, with rockets launched from U.S. helicopters kicking up clouds of smoke and debris. Bradley fighting vehicles patrolling the nearly deserted, bullet-scarred streets attacked militants, who responded with mortar fire and rocket-propelled grenades.

"We are under constant enemy small-arms, mortar, and RPG attack," said U.S. Lt. Chris Kent, whose unit was about 300 yards from the compound. "U.S. forces are consolidating positions to allow for future operations. Morale is very high."

Iraqi forces, accompanying U.S. troops into the Old City for the first time in recent days, combed through the neighborhood, approaching as close as 200 yards to the shrine, controlled by militants loyal to radical cleric Muqtada al-Sadr.

Meanwhile in Baghdad, assassins bombed the convoys of two government ministers in separate attacks that killed five people and a suicide bomber, but left the ministers unharmed, officials said.

In Baghdad, assassins fired a rocket-propelled grenade at a U.S. patrol on Monday night, killing one soldier and wounding two others, the military said Tuesday.

U.S. deaths in Iraq

The Associated Press

As of Monday, 958 U.S. servicemembers have died since the beginning of military operations in Iraq in March 2003, according to the Defense Department. Of those, 716 died as a result of hostile action and 242 died of nonhostile causes.

The British military has reported 64 deaths; Italy, 18; Spain, 11; Poland, 10; Bulgaria, six; Ukraine, six; Slovakia, three; Thailand, two; and Denmark, El Salvador, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia and the Netherlands have reported one death each.

Since May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 820 U.S. servicemembers have died — 607 as a result of hostile action and 213 of nonhostile causes, according to the Military's numbers.

The latest deaths reported by U.S. Central Command:

■ A soldier was killed Monday by a roadside bomb in west Mosul, Iraq.
■ A Marine was killed in a vehicle accident Saturday in Anbar province, Iraq.

■ In three separate incidents, one Marine was killed and three Marines died of wounds received Saturday in Anbar province, Iraq.

The latest identifications reported by the military:

Killed Friday near Samarra, Iraq, when an explosive detonated near their vehicle; assigned to the Army National Guard's 216th Engineer Battalion, Hamilton, Ohio: ■ Army 1st Lt. Charles L. Wilkins III, 38, Columbus, Ohio.
■ Army Pfc. Ryan A. Martin, 22, Mount Vernon, Ohio.

Killed Saturday in Anbar province, Iraq, assigned to 1st Light Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, 1st Marine Division, sion, 1 Marine Expeditionary Force, Camp Pendleton, Calif.

■ Marine Cpl. Nicanor Alvarez, 22, San Bernardino, Calif.
■ Marine Sgt. Jason Cook, 25, Okanagan, Wash.

Also killed:

■ Army Pfc. Kevin A. Cumming, 22, White Plains, N.Y., killed Saturday in Baghdad in a grenade attack; assigned to 1st Squadron, 7th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

■ Marine Cpl. Christopher Belchik, 30, Altam, Ill., killed Sunday in Anbar province, Iraq; assigned to 2nd Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment, 2nd Marine Division, 11 Marine Expeditionary Force, Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Four honored for valor

Four 1st Infantry Division soldiers from Troop F, 4th Cavalry, were recently awarded Army Commendation Medals with valor for heroism in combat, according to a military news release.

Three ARCOMs with valor went to 1st Lt. Carl E. Gregory of Stilwell, Okla.; Sgt. Mitchell W. Wagner of North Canton, Ohio; and Spc. Paul Carrisoza of Hemet, Calif., for their fighting roles in Baquba on April 11-13. The three, attached to a tank company, helped open up an avenue of approach to the center of the city, according to the release.

Pfc. John M. White of Anchorage, Alaska, was awarded the ARCOM with valor for aiding a wounded soldier under fire after the soldier's Humvee was struck by a rocket-propelled grenade.

Col. Dana H. Pittard, commander of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, awarded the medals during a brief ceremony Aug. 6.

Judge refuses to order Rumsfeld to talk

Also rules intelligence officers may have to testify in Abu Ghraib prison abuse case, unless charged

BY DAVID RISING

The Associated Press

MANNHEIM, Germany — A U.S. military judge hearing the Abu Ghraib prison abuse case refused Tuesday to order Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld to talk to lawyers about prisoner interrogation policy, but suggested he may force key military intelligence officers to testify unless the government charges them.

The ruling on the officers opened the door to broadening the scope of the scandal beyond the 372nd Military Police Company, a U.S. Army Reserve unit to which all soldiers charged so far were assigned.

Senior prosecutor Maj. Michael Holly told the court two low-ranking soldiers from a military intelligence unit who "we believe are co-conspirators" would probably be charged soon.

Six military police are facing charges of mistreating prisoners at the Baghdad jail. A seventh, Spc. Jeremy C. Sivits, pleaded guilty May 19 and was sentenced to 10 years in prison.

On Tuesday, a lawyer for Staff Sgt. Ivan L. "Chip" Frederick said his client would also plead guilty to some charges. Frederick had decided to do the "honest and dignified thing" and hoped others in the group would step forward, lawyer Gary Myers said outside the courtroom.

"He's taking responsibility for certain acts," Myers said, adding that an agreement had been reached with prosecutors to drop other charges against him at a hearing on Oct. 20 in Baghdad. He refused to elaborate, saying, "There's always the possibility something will change."

Frederick is charged with mistreating detainees, conspiracy to mistreat detainees, dereliction of duty and committing an innocent act.

Attorneys for Spc. Javal Davis demanded that Rumsfeld and his deputy Stephen Cambone submit to an interview, claiming Rumsfeld had signed a 2002 memo authorizing the use of dogs, nudity, physical contact and isolation against prisoners at the U.S. military base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Judge Col. James Pohl rejected a request, but said the motion may be brought back if the defense can fill some of the gaps between the accusations against Davis and Rumsfeld's alleged policy.

"There's got to be some links in that chain," Pohl said. "I'm not saying there is not a link. I'm saying at this point you haven't shown me sufficient evidence."

Davis and the five other military police facing charges of abusing prisoners at the Baghdad prison insist they were following orders from military intelligence officers and civilian contractors.

Davis' civilian attorney, Paul Bergin, asked the court to grant immunity from prosecution to Col. Thomas Pappas, the military intelligence commander at Abu Ghraib, and several other officers who may have known of the abuse but have refused to talk to investigators citing their right to avoid self-incrimination.

The testimony would broaden the case beyond the reservists and raise the possibility that intelligence officers and others within the military encouraged the abuse to gain information about Iraqi insurgents battling U.S. troops.

But prosecutors argued they might charge the officers after the military completes a report on the role of military intelligence facilities that is expected to be presented to U.S. Congress early next month, which could be made difficult if they were given immunity.

Pohl gave the prosecution until Sept. 17 to convince him that they should not be compelled to testify. He made it clear, however, that if the government does not intend to file major charges against the officers by then, he would probably grant them immunity to testify.

U.S. Army Staff Sgt. Ivan L. Frederick and his wife, Martha, talk to the media Tuesday in front of the U.S. military court at Taylor Barracks in Mannheim, Germany, where Frederick and another soldier charged with abusing Iraqi prisoners at the Abu Ghraib prison in Baghdad had their pretrial hearings.

"This would appear to be critical information to the defendants that this was condoned by the higher-ups," Pohl told the prosecutors. "You know where this is going — it's either pay me now or pay me later."

The judge said he would also allow Reserve Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, the military police commander at Abu Ghraib at the time of the alleged abuse, compelled to testify at the upcoming courts martial.

In the second day of pretrial hearings of four defendants at a U.S. military barracks in Germany, Davis admitted that he initially lied to a military investigator by saying he did not take part in maltreatment.

Official says U.S. is watching Afghan trial of alleged vigilante

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — There is no evidence to support claims by three Americans that they were severely beaten in jail since their arrest on charges they kidnapped Afghans as part of a freelance counterterrorism operation, a U.S. official said Tuesday.

"They are being treated well," said the official, who spoke on condition he not be further identified.

U.S. consular officials have met with the defendants, Jonathan "Jack" Idema, Edward Caraballo and Brent Bennett, and the American official said there was no evidence the men were beaten.

The three face up to 20 years in jail if convicted on charges of torture and kidnapping. They were arrested July 5 when authorities freed about a dozen Afghan men being held at a private jail. The men were allegedly tortured using boiling water, and much of the abuse was apparently videotaped.

Idema, a former U.S. soldier with a checked past that includes a stint in federal prison for fraud, denies he tortured anyone and claims he was working with the approval of the Pentagon and senior Afghan authorities. Videos of the alleged torture have not been played in court.

The American official said there is nothing to Idema's claim that he was working for the government.

Jonathan Idema, 48, charged with running his own private prison and abusing Afghan prisoners in Kabul, strains to hear while standing trial on Monday.

"I can find no evidence whatsoever that Jack worked for us or was doing anything with the U.S. government," he said.

The American official said the embassy wants to make sure the trial is conducted fairly, but also recognizes the right of Afghanistan to pursue a case.

"Our embassy is watching closely and we should let the trial proceed and not try to influence it," he said. "The charges leveled are very serious charges about serious crimes," he said.

The U.S. military has described Idema as a freelancer with no connections to it whatsoever. However, it has acknowledged receiving a prisoner from his crew and holding the man for about two months. The suspect subsequently been released.

Bin Laden driver charged with conspiracy at Gitmo

BY PAISLEY DODDS

The Associated Press

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba — Osama bin Laden's chauffeur was formally charged Tuesday before the first U.S. military commissions since World War II, appearing at a pretrial hearing as his defense lawyer challenged the legality of the hearings.

Salim Ahmed Hamdan, a 34-year-old Yemeni, said he earned a pittance for his family as bin Laden's driver prior to the Sept. 11 attack, but he has denied involvement in terrorism.

U.S. officials allege he served as the al-Qaida leader's bodyguard and delivered weapons to his operatives. Hamdan was charged with conspiracy as an al-Qaida member to commit war crimes, including attacking civilians and civilian targets, murder, destroying property and terrorism.

The hearing marked the first such tribunal proceedings since World War II. The five-member commission allows for secret evidence and no federal appeals.

"This process goes against everything that we fought for in the history of the United States," Hamdan's attorney, Lt. Cmdr. Charles Swift, said earlier in the week.

Hamdan could choose not to enter a plea. Swift has filed a lawsuit in U.S. civilian courts that is to be heard in Washington, D.C., alleging the commissions violate U.S. and international law.

Mr. Hamdan has languished in solitary confinement without good cause for more than eight months awaiting a hearing," Swift said in his statement. Hamdan was among six prisoners designated for commissions being held in isolation cells.

Swift contends Hamdan was a pilgrim who took a job at bin Laden's farm on his way to Tajikistan in 1996 or 1997, that he had no knowledge of bin Laden's activities and he never took up arms against the United States.

According to court documents, Hamdan complained he was "going crazy" in solitary confinement. "I have not been permitted to see the sun or hear other people outside or talk with other people. I am alone except for a guard," Hamdan said in February in an affidavit. "One month is like a year here, and I have considered pleading guilty in order to get out of here," Hamdan said after two months in solitary.

Before his transfer to Guantanamo, Hamdan was held for six months in U.S. custody in Afghanistan. There, he said he was beaten, forced to lie still for days, dressed in overalls in freezing temperatures and shown a gun while being threatened with death and torture.

The Pentagon, in a charge sheet, alleged Hamdan, who is also known as Saif al-Jadawi, was bin Laden's driver and bodyguard between February 1996 and Nov. 24, 2001.

The Pentagon also alleged he transported weapons to al-Qaida operatives, trained at an al-Qaida camp and drove in convoys that carried bin Laden. It does not say he took part in any specific acts of violence or participated in planning any attacks.

Errors rampant in deployed Reserve pay

GAO finds 95 percent of Army reservists studied had experienced payroll problems

BY KEN GUGGENHEIM
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Army Reserve pay procedures for activated soldiers are so convoluted that mistakes occurred in 95 percent of the cases examined by congressional auditors, the Government Accountability Office said Monday.

Soldiers sent to Iraq and Afghanistan have had to spend a year or more straightening out problems affecting their pay, allowances and tax benefits, the GAO said.

Most errors involved overpayments, but those proved to be problematic for soldiers who didn't acknowledge the extra pay or didn't set aside enough money to pay it back. In one example, the GAO recommended a criminal investigation for a soldier who didn't report $36,000 in overpayments.

The GAO found the payment system was so "error-prone, cumbersome and complex that neither [the Defense Department] nor, more importantly, Army Reserve soldiers themselves could be reasonably assured of timely and accurate payments."

It warned the payroll problems could hurt morale and the Army's efforts to retain reservists.

In its response, the Pentagon agreed with 15 GAO recommendations for improving payroll procedures and said it is already taking steps to correct the problems.

The GAO report comes as the National Guard and Reserve take on an increasingly important role in Iraq, making up about 40 percent of the total force. Active-duty forces have been stretched thin as fighting with insurgents continues.

The GAO previously found similar problems affecting the Army National Guard. In November, it reported payroll problems affecting 450 of 481 mobilized soldiers whose records it examined.

In the Army Reserve study, it examined the payroll records of 348 soldiers who were mobilized, deployed and demobilized from August 2002 to January 2004. The soldiers were in seven Army Reserve units providing combat support in Iraq or Afghanistan and one providing homeland defense services.

It found 332 of the soldiers had at least one problem. Overall, the problems amounted to $375,000 in pay and allowances, including $247,000 in overpayments to 256 soldiers.

The problems often lingered unresolved, sometimes lasting more than a year.

"A number of soldiers and their families told us they spent considerable time and effort on these pay issues, sometimes while soldiers were deployed in hostile and difficult environments overseas," the GAO said.

"Soldiers were sometimes required to spend considerable time and were frustrated in their efforts to determine the exact sums owed or establish a repayment plan." Activated Army reservists may receive extra pay for such factors as hazardous duty, foreign language proficiency or hardship assignments. They are also eligible for allowances, such as for housing and family separation.

As bullets fly, U.S. sniper in hot pursuit of insurgent

BY JASON CHUDY

NAJAF, Iraq — It's a deadly game of cat and mouse, where the loser takes a bullet.

Two snipers: One American and one unknown foe spent part of Monday evening hunting each other near an Iraqi police station in Najaf.

Only in this hunt, the 1st Cavalry Division soldier doesn't know where his adversary is, and the enemy knows exactly where the Americans are.

But, the enemy sniper isn't accurate enough to hit any of the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment soldiers, who have 120 mm mortars set up in his hunting ground.

Bullets occasionally whizzed past Pfc. Terrence Martin of Headquarters Company, as he and another soldier, Spc. Adam Kohler, scanned a cluster of buildings a few hundred meters from the police station.

"Basically we're trying to find out where he's at," said Martin, 21, of Mesquite, Texas. "They brought us in to find this guy ... a couple of days ago."

The enemy sniper has fired scores of rounds at American soldiers, and even a few rocket-propelled grenades. The soldiers man mortars and must remain in their immediate location to lob rounds when called upon.

"Last night, he was shooting at us," said Kohler, a mortarman with the 2-7 Cav. "That's dangerous, especially when we have 120 mm explosives."

"Well, he's missed me 70 times so far, hopefully he'll continue to miss me," said Spc. Leonid Yuzkov, who mans a 50-caliber machine gun with the mortar unit.

Yuzkov and a handful of other soldiers stood in a secure building courtyard and watched Martin stalk the sniper from the large lot filled with military and civilian vehicles. They are more than morbid spectators.

"Plain and simple, if he gets hit, someone has to go out to get him medical attention," said Pvt. Gary Clark, also with Headquarters Company.

After about 20 minutes, Martin returned unscathed, having neither spotted the sniper nor fired any rounds at the elusive enemy.

A few minutes later, the crews headed out to their mortars and Martin returned to the lot to continue the hunt.

Suddenly, an RPG sailed through the lot, the sniper's reminder to Martin that he's still out there too, hunting.

1st ID soldier convicted of AWOL in Würzburg

Soldier cited string of problems at home

BY STEVE LEWIS
Stars and Stripes

WÜRZBURG, Germany — Plagued with family problems back in the United States, Pfc. Christopher Williams said he couldn't get his Iraq-deployed unit to give him emergency leave. So he took off on his own, three different times.

For that, Williams, 20, of the 1st Infantry Division's 101st Military Intelligence Battalion will lose his Army career. In a court-martial Tuesday, the military judge, Col. Stephanie Browne, found him guilty of three counts of absent without leave and one count of disobeying an order.

"His actions seriously taxed an already undermanned unit," said Capt. Don Noble, the military prosecutor. "He could have helped his family much better if he'd stayed on task and followed the 1st ID motto, 'Duty First.'"

According to testimony from fellow soldiers, Williams had been a solid soldier until late last year, when he suffered a run of family tragedy.

Williams told the court three friends were murdered in a drive-by shooting. His older brother's entire family was hit by a truck. His wife, who remained in the States with the couple's son, had cancer, was suicidal, and was pregnant with a child fathered by Williams' cousin.

Then in early February, a few days before the 101st MI deployed to Iraq, Williams learned his younger brother was in a coma after an epileptic seizure. He said his commander denied a request for emergency leave.

Within days he was sent back to Germany for a psychiatric evaluation. He said he sank deeper into depression when the unit refused to let him go home.

"I felt like they weren't doing anything for me, so I just left," Williams told the court. He went AWOL three times for a total of 100 days, staying with a friend off-base because he lacked a passport to go to the States. He was jailed July 7.

"He feels so confused and so alone," said his attorney, Capt. Debra Quanebeck. "He doesn't know what to do."

But Capt. Tanya Burke, the unit's rear detachment commander, said Williams told her about nothing except his marital problems and his brother's epilepsy. She said he never formally requested leave and didn't attend required counseling sessions.

Browne sentenced Williams to serve eight months in prison and forfeit all pay, reduced him to the lowest enlisted rank and gave him a bad-conduct discharge. An agreement with prosecutors cut the jail time to six months.

Roadside bombs destroyed near Samarra

North Dakota National Guard soldiers from the 141st Engineer Battalion discovered two homemade bombs during road-clearing operations Saturday in the dangerous area near Samarra, Iraq, according to the Task Force 141 press daily briefing report.

The bombs were successfully destroyed by the explosive ordnance disposal, the report said.

Samarra, 50 miles north of Baghdad, has been a center of resistance to the occupation by U.S. and other coalition forces. It is patrolled by soldiers from the 1st Infantry Division's Task Force 1-26, made up largely of soldiers from 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry Regiment at Schweinfurt, Germany.

Pfc. Luis Avila, 21, from Los Angeles, Calif., left, and Staff Sgt. Maurice Carson, 37, both of Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 503rd Infantry Regiment, wait at Camp Buehring, Kuwait, for their Iraq mission to start. Currently, the South Korea-based 2nd Brigade Combat Team, or Strikeforce, is confined to Kuwaiti desert bases before heading to Iraq.

Strikeforce eager for Iraq mission to start

CAMP BUEHRING, Kuwait — Whether 2nd Infantry Division soldiers find themselves itching for combat, longing for home or just killing time, most want to head north and start.

The soldiers, from the South Korea-based 2nd Brigade Combat Team — the Strikeforce — have been in Kuwait for about two weeks preparing for their mission in Iraq. Exactly where in Iraq the 3,600-strong brigade will go is still a secret. But most say the sooner the mission starts the better.

Thirty-seven-year-old Staff Sgt. Gary Talley, a squad leader with Company C, 1st Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, has served 16 years and never seen combat.

The bulky squad leader from Trenton, Tenn., said he is looking forward to testing himself and the 10 soldiers in his unit.

"There is going to be a lot of muscle memory and remembering all the tactics we learned before coming over here. Our goal is to get rid of the insurgents who are keeping the regular people down in Iraq," he said before heading off to a class on improvised explosive devices.

Not all the Strikeforce soldiers are as excited at the prospect of combat, but they still want to start the mission.

"We are done waiting here," said Spc.

Shawn Biederman, 27, a forward observer with 1-9's Company A. "Everybody wants to go there and get it started."

The Philadelphia native said most soldiers thought their Iraq tours started once they arrived in Kuwait but found out the clock doesn't start ticking down until boots are on the ground at their forward operating base in Iraq.

Currently, the Strikeforce soldiers are confined to the isolated Camp Buehring and Udair Range, deep in the heart of the Kuwaiti desert, training and preparing equipment.

With no bars or alcohol, which is illegal in Kuwait, and virtually no interaction with the Kuwaitis, soldiers spend free time watching DVDs, playing touch football, basketball and beach volleyball, working out or sending letters home.

"I just want to get it [the Iraq mission] started," Biederman said. "My wife and daughter are missing the hell out of me, and I can't wait to get it done."

said the shaven-headed soldier, whose 4-month old daughter, Shaina, is with his wife in South Korea.

Strikeforce deployed to the Middle East from bases near the South Korean Demilitarized Zone. Biederman had been on the peninsula two years before he deployed and recently extended his tour by another two years to give his Filipina wife time to apply for a U.S. visa.

As he falls asleep in his canvas stretcher in his booth, Biederman thinks past Iraq, he said.

"I always think about my future. My future with my wife, and my wife's future without me. I have a game plan in case things happen," he said.

The young soldier is making voice recordings in Kuwait to send them to his daughter.

"Things [to tell her] if something happens to me," he said. "I tell her to be good for her mother. I tell her there are bad people in this world, and she needs to be aware of who they are. I wish I could be there to teach her, and hopefully I will."

Another Strikeforce soldier eager to start working in Iraq is Staff Sgt. Maurice Carson, 37, of Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 503rd Infantry Regiment.

Carson also wants to get back home to be with his family at Fort Bragg, N.C., who have not seen much of him in the past two years.

First he deployed to Afghanistan with the Seventh Special Forces Group, then he went to South Korea, where he had been for eight months before heading for Iraq.

"I had already reached my halfway point in Korea," he said. "I was just about to go on mid-tour leave for 30 days when we were notified we were coming here. We were allowed 12 days leave."

Carson's youngest son, Darrius, 12, did not take the news of his father's deployment well.

"He was kind of concerned about when I was coming back. There is a little more fear about going to Iraq. He is still dealing with it as of now. I spoke to him two days ago, and he was still kind of on edge. I guess he is watching a lot of television."

"The first thing he asks me is am I all right, and then he tells me that he is praying for me," he said.

For the moment, Carson's biggest concern is the nine soldiers who work under him, he said.

"I have soldiers to take care of, and I am going to give them the best guidance and protection I can. I am more concerned about my soldiers than myself. My goal is to bring my guys back safe, sound and healthy."

Some soldiers are nervous about the pending mission, which is understandable, he said.

"I can't expect them to be totally comfortable, but I want them to be prepared for anything," he said, adding he will do everything he can to help them.

"Prior to deploying I wrote a letter to each of their parents," he said of his squad members, "and pretty much gave them my word I was going to bring their kids back safe and sound."

Another soldier waiting at Camp Buehring, Pfc. Greg Calim, 21, a mechanic with Battery B, 5th Battalion, 5th Air Defense Artillery Regiment, works around the clock to check all of his unit's equipment in Kuwait.

"We are making double sure all the vehicles are top-notch," he said.

Calim misses his fiancée, who returned to the Philippines from South Korea when he deployed to the Middle East. He also thinks often of his mother, raising horses in Colorado, who taught him to shoot as a boy on family camping vacations.

Mail and telephone provide a link with his family and future wife, he said.

"I try to stay in contact when I can because I might not get the chance to later on," he said.

He writes letters but doesn't use e-mail. "It just feels more personal to me. I don't mess with the Internet because you have to wait for the computer," he said.

When he gets home he plans to marry and move to the States. But for now, Calim is focused on his mission, staying alert and staying alive, he said.

Two weeks ago, many of the soldiers at Camp Buehring had no idea if they would be in Kuwait for a few weeks or months. But the sooner they get on the road and head north, the better most will feel.

Chaplains lead spiritual fight to keep American military machine running

BY TODD PITMAN
The Associated Press

NAJAF, Iraq — The Marines screamed for a medic and tried to staunch the blood. But in the end, there was nothing they could do.

In a surreal battlefield of tombstones, in a Muslim cemetery thousands of miles from home, a young American Marine lay unconscious after a mortar barrage, five minutes from death.

Lt. Cmdr. Paul Shaughnessy, a U.S. Navy chaplain, pressed a thumb across the motionless corporal's blood-drenched forehead, made the sign of the cross and summoned the strength to perform last rites on a man he barely knew.

"I absolve you of all your sins in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit," Shaughnessy said while kneeling beside Cpl. Roberto Abad, a 22-year-old from Los Angeles, just before he died Aug. 6. "May God, who gave you life, bring you everlasting life."

As American troops cope with life — and death — on a faraway battlefield, military chaplains cope with death, offering prayers, comfort and spiritual advice to keep the American military machine running.

Since Aug. 5, U.S. troops have fought intense skirmishes with Iraqi militants loyal to firebrand Shiite Muslim cleric Muqtada al-Sadr in Najaf's vast cemetery, believed to be the largest in the Muslim world.

Through a maze of tan-colored, Arabic-inscribed tombs, U.S. troops have scrambled onto mausoleums to open fire, taken refuge in underground crypts and, with bombs falling and bullets flying, wondered where they might die here.

"Many of them had a great deal of reservation about going into a cemetery," said Capt. Warren Haggray, a 48-year-old Baptist Army chaplain from Fort Hood, Texas. "One of the things that I teach my soldiers from the Bible is that there's a time for war and there's a time for peace, and there are times that you just have to get out there and fight."

Shaughnessy, a 54-year-old Roman Catholic priest from Worcester, Mass., had just finished a prayer service for a lance corporal, shot fatally in the neck by a sniper, when he joined a supply convoy to spend the night with Marines in the cemetery.

Crouched behind tombstones for cover, the Marines came under mortar attack at dusk.

One round exploded about 50 yards from Shaughnessy, who, after hearing calls for help, found two severely wounded Marines bleeding profusely.

Believing they would die, he performed last rites on both of them. One was wounded in the thigh and survived, Shaughnessy learned later.

The second, pinned between two tombstones, did not.

Lacking a stretcher, the Marines put rifles under the corporal's legs and back to move him out of the cemetery.

"The young Marines who carried him, they were switching off," Shaughnessy said. "One, he was his buddy, he had blood all over him. He was pretty affected by it. He came back to his position, and I said, 'You gotta take deep breaths.' They lost a fellow Marine, and they knew they had to continue, but in their eyes, you could see the sadness."

At such times, chaplains, who accompany military units unarmed, can help simply by being present.

"A lot of them wanted blessings during that time. You just didn't know through the night what was gonna happen," Shaughnessy said. "The first time you have an RPG or a mortar explode next to you, it's pretty sobering. The reality of death is more than just an abstraction. It matures them pretty fast."

Few troops appear to have reservations about taking what they see as "enemy" life, though.

Chaplains help grease the wheels of any soldier's troubled conscience by arguing that killing combatants is justified.

"I teach them from the Scripture, and in the Scripture I can see many times where men were told, 'to go out and defeat the enemy,'" Haggray said. "This is real stuff. You're out there and you gotta eliminate that guy, because if you don't, he's gonna eliminate you."

Shaughnessy agreed.

"The Marine Corps is an assault-based entity. You have to have them ready to do some pretty nasty things. The danger is turning that off, that's always the problem," he said. "We want them to perform their duties in a moral and just way. I try to convey to them in the most cogent way I can that you don't use excessive force, you don't take innocent life."

Some Iraqi kids must keep ties to U.S. GIs secret

BY DOUG STRUCK
The Washington Post

BAGHDAD — Hanna is 10. She lives on a U.S. Army base here, playing computer games while her mother cleans. She has no playmates. Her mother is frightened to send her to school. If other students learned of her contact with Americans, "she would be kidnapped or killed."

"I want to protect her. I want her to stay on this base where she is safe," said her mother, Amil Alami, 42.

Wars are always hard on civilians, especially children. In this conflict, some children despise the Americans as killers and avoid them, but others find their lives inextricably entwined with those of the foreign troops.

If the Americans leave, Alami said, she and her daughter would be homeless, penniless and defenseless. "I want them to stay forever. I hope someday they will give me a small house" on the base, a guarded compound on the outskirts of Baghdad, she said.

Hanna, a sweet, round-faced girl, chirped in: "I think it's good to be here. The American soldiers protect me from the mortars and bad people. The soldiers are cute and I love them."

"The soldiers really like the kids," said Mark Woods, a sergeant who took an interest in the eight families living within the outer perimeter of the base, which houses the 1st Cavalry Division's 3rd Brigade. Many of the family members work on the base, performing jobs that include cleaning and plumbing.

"It's true that some of those families have become dependent on us," Wood said. "But we are dependent on them, too."

Hanna and her mother showed up at the base about nine months ago.

Her mother was reeling from the breakup of an abusive marriage, she said, and needed money. With the help of a translator friend, Alami was hired to clean offices and barracks at the base for about $35 a week. When the soldiers saw that she and her daughter had no place to stay, they gave her a room at the base for a few days, and then moved her to one of the old trailers there, alongside those of some other base workers. They eat free meals on the base.

Hanna's mother expresses gratitude and says she trusts the soldiers. Woods is trying to arrange a school bus to take the 13 children from the Iraqi families who live on the base to a nearby school when it starts in two weeks. But Hanna's mother is unsure.

Interpreters and even laborers who work with the Americans have been killed as collaborators by opponents of the U.S. occupation.

If Hanna goes off the base to a school, she would have to keep secret where she lives from the other students and the teachers. But it is a dangerous lie, her mother said.

"I don't know what to do. She is my only child, and I want to hold her close to me, to protect her. I don't know whether to send her to school here or not," Alami said.

Some other Iraqi children have less positive views of U.S. soldiers, who they more frequently see searching homes, brandishing weapons and patrolling in armored vehicles.

"You've got helicopters going over all the time, fighting all the time, mortar bombs going off and clashes. Of course the children are scared all the time," said Katham Muzal, the director of an orphanage in Baghdad that tries to get children off the street. "You get two kinds of children from that. The first are scared by all the guns. The second want to go talk to soldiers and mix with them."

Hagee seeks expanded at-sea combat staging

Navy, Marines developing strategy to place forces in war zone without using other nations

BY CARLOS BONGIOANNI

Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — The Marine Corps is developing plans to strike in force deep within war zones without having to use other countries as staging areas, as happened in Kuwait prior to the invasion of Iraq, the Corps' commandant, Gen. Michael W. Hagee, says.

Speaking at the National Press Club in Washington, Hagee recapped what the Marine Corps has done the past few years in the global war against terror. He also outlined the role the Corps will play in years to come.

Just over a year after the November 2001 operations in Afghanistan, some 70,000 Marines and sailors from ships in the Persian Gulf, went ashore in Kuwait to support Operation Iraqi Freedom.

In the future, "we want to be able to do that operation without having Kuwait" as a staging area, said Hagee. "Can we do that today? No. Can we do it in the future? We believe so."

A key strategy the Navy and Marine Corps are trying to develop, Hagee said, is the ability to place forces deep within enemy territory, within 10 to 12 days — up to 15,000 Marines with all the equipment and logistical support needed to sustain combat operations.

In past wars, he noted, the strategy was to get a foothold on an island or peninsula and then build a "gigantic mound" of supplies and logistics. "We don't want to do that anymore," the general said. "We want that to remain at sea."

The arrival and assembly of Marines, their equipment and supplies would occur aboard ships at sea and then there would be "selective off-loads" from sea to specific sites ashore.

A smaller version of the concept worked well in Afghanistan, Hagee noted. Two months after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, he said the Marines were the only force ready to launch a large-scale ground attack from inside Afghanistan against Taliban and al-Qaida forces.

"We projected combat power 400 miles," to get some 4,000 Marines aboard ships in the Arabian Sea ashore inside landlocked Afghanistan, Hagee recounted. "Prior to that, our doctrine said we could project power ashore from the sea only about 200 nautical miles."

Hagee said one of his major concerns as commandant of the Marine Corps is providing the capabilities that joint-force combat commanders need, "much more rapidly than we can today."

To beef up capabilities, the Navy and Marine Corps have, over the past few years, developed expeditionary strike groups, Hagee said. These are the old amphibious ready groups and Marine expeditionary units, but they have added destroyers and cruisers, as well as a submarine. The entire group trains together and deploys together.

"The combatant commander likes them a great deal. ... They bring more strike capability and additional intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance capabilities. They come as a complete package, and he can use them wherever he wants."

But one problem with the strike groups, especially those deploying from the West Coast, is it takes up to 45 days to get to Central Command's area of operation in the Arabian Sea or Persian Gulf. And it takes another 45 days to return home.

"That's over a third of the time that they're deployed, a third of the time the Central Command combatant commander does not have that capability," said Hagee.

To address that concern, the Navy and the Marine Corps have been experimenting with a concept called sea swap. The idea is to leave the ships and their equipment in the theater where they are needed and rotate sailors and Marines in and out.

"The Navy has done it on smaller ships, with some success," said Hagee.

"But it's never been done on a large deck, like ... [an amphibious assault ship] or carrier, and it's never been done for a large number of ships at the same time. ... We're going to experiment with it over the next year or so, because if we can be successful, we can provide more capability for that combatant commander ... simply by keeping those platforms forward deployed."

Bell: USAREUR, V Corps to be one command

General expects U.S. Army Europe numbers to be cut by two-thirds

By JON R. ANDERSON
Stars and Stripes

HEIDELBERG, Germany — The top two Army commands in Europe will be merged into a single rapidly deployable headquarters as part of an overhaul of U.S. forces overseas.

V Corps, which led the assault into Iraq, and U.S. Army Europe, its parent command, will morph into one unit combining the functions of both headquarters, USAREUR commander Gen. B.J. Bell wrote in a message to troops and families throughout Europe on Saturday.

The announcement comes on the heels of President Bush's decision to withdraw up to 70,000 troops from Europe and South Korea.

Currently, USAREUR has 62,000 troops spread across 240 installations. Most of those bases are clustered in 14 countries, with the vast majority in Germany.

"We expect to reduce those numbers by two-thirds over the next 10 years," Bell wrote. "Our remaining communities will have access to advanced training facilities, high capacity power-projection infrastructure, modernized well-being infrastructure and services, and state-of-the-art communications."

The 1st Armored and 1st Infantry divisions, both heavy tank and mechanized infantry units, will move to bases in the United States as part of the restructuring. Officials hope to move one of the Army's new Stryker Brigades to the Grafenwöhr training hub in eastern Germany.

ny, Bell wrote.

The 173rd Airborne Brigade, based in Vicenza, Italy, will get a third battalion of paratroopers as well as additional support units, Bell wrote.

Units remaining in Europe will be joined by rotational brigades from the States, which primarily will deploy to new "forward operating sites in the territories of our new NATO partners to the east," Bell wrote.

Romania, Bulgaria and Poland have been singled out by defense officials as possible hosts.

Overseeing it all will be the new merged command, named U.S. Army Europe & Task Force 5.

With USAREUR a four-star command and V Corps a three-star billet, it's unclear whether the new command will be led by a three- or four-star general.

USAREUR and V Corps' separate brigades — mostly logistics and support units — will be merged and streamlined into what officials are calling Units of Action, under a new Armywide reorganization of combat formations.

"These USAs will provide the correct mix of rapidly deployable, early entry enablers for joint operations," wrote Bell.

Army forces in Europe will include USAs for aviation, engineering, communications, military police, intelligence, artillery, medical and others.

"We will also establish one or two additional small, light and mobile [Joint Task Force]-capable headquarters ready for contingencies around the globe," he wrote.

Meanwhile, Bell stated, many units may soon be moving out of Europe or disbanding entirely. "Some units may inactive or return to the [continental United States] in the relative near-term," wrote Bell. But, he added, "There will be no surprises. If your unit is affected you and you and your family will have time to properly prepare."

Bell also promised that no unit would be reactivated directly from combat zones in Afghanistan or Iraq.

Every deployed unit "will redeploy and re-integrate at its European home base first," he pledged. "No family will be left to move themselves."

Ramstein runway to close for repairs next month

By MARNI MCENTEE
Stars and Stripes

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — A major portion of military air traffic in the European theater will be rerouted for 10 days in September when the Ramstein Air Base runway closes for repairs.

The runway will shut down from Sept. 13-17, then partially reopen Sept. 18-22, while contractors repair deteriorated concrete and asphalt, Lt. Col. Cliff Puckett, commander of the 435th Operations Support Squadron, said Monday. The runway is to reopen completely on Sept. 23, though it may take a few days for all air traffic to return.

The runway has deteriorated due to heavy use during Operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom, and the normal freeze-thaw cycle of the changing seasons, he said.

Airfield managers had hoped that a new runway under construction would be completed in time to avoid major repairs on the old landing strip. But work on the new runway, being needed for the transfer of all military air traffic from Rhein-Main Air Base to Ramstein by December 2005, is three months behind schedule, Puckett said.

"We haven't had the luxury of saying we're just going to close a 9,000-foot national asset that we really need," Puckett said.

But, as the OEF and OIF missions have "matured" into a more predictable schedule, managers were able to reorganize the average of 90 takeoffs and landings a day at Ramstein to work around the construction. The repairs will cost $900,000.

"We need a viable runway at least until April 2005," when the new runway is expected to be finished, Puckett said.

Roughly 3,000 duty and space-available passengers will be affected by the detours, said

Capt. Kieran Keely of Ramstein's aerial port operations office.

Large cargo lifters such as C-5s and contracted 747s will be unable to use Ramstein the entire 10 days, Puckett said. But all other, more versatile and smaller planes will be able to return to Ramstein Sept. 18, when 7,000 feet of the 9,200-foot runway re-open.

The closure means that cargo and passenger traffic, including movement of wounded troops from Iraq and Afghanistan, and training flights, will head to at least six alternate airfields in Germany, England, Kyrgyzstan and Iceland, Puckett said.

If needed, passengers and wounded either will be bused from alternate airfields to their destinations or flown there on Army helicopters. Some space-available travel from Ramstein will be completely canceled during the first five days of the closure.

The closure of Europe's busiest military airfield has forced Ramstein airfield managers and Air Mobility Command leaders to reroute traffic as follows:

■ Sept. 13-17: At least four of Ramstein's 86th Airlift Wing aircraft, which primarily carry cargo and passengers to the Balkans, will be rerouted to Spangdahlem Air Base. Duty passengers on their way to the region still will be processed at the Ramstein Air Terminal, but will be bused to Spangdahlem to catch flights. Showtimes for an average of 300 passengers on those flights that week will increase from three to at least six hours, to ensure they make their connections.

Wounded troops from Iraq and Afghanistan will be flown to Rhein-Main and bused to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center. Patients who need to get to LDMC and then be airlifted there by Army helicopters, which will be staged at a private airfield in Zweibrücken.

The 86th Airlift Wing's fleet of C-21s and C-20s, used primarily for transport of "distinguished visitors," such as military brass and congressional delegates, will operate out of Zweibrücken. Distinguished visitors will be driven to Ramstein or, in some cases, taken there by Army helicopters.

Emergency medical evacuation C-21s, which transport ill patients from around the European theater to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center, will be staged at Zweibrücken. Patients then will be bused or flown by helicopter to LDMC.

Ramstein's 37th Airlift Squadron will conduct a training flight to Naval Air Station Keflavik, Iceland.

■ Sept. 13-22: Air Mobility Command aircraft from the United States and around the globe will land at RAF Mildenhall, England. Cargo already in place at Ramstein will be trucked to Mildenhall, where it will be loaded on AMC planes for transport. Cargo landing at Mildenhall will be trucked back to Ramstein.

AMC will send 55 people to Mildenhall to help handle the increased operations — about 11 extra planes a week.

AMC will reroute three flights a week, with an average of 14 Space-A duty passengers each, from Ramstein to Rhein-Main Air Base or to Manas Air Base, Kyrgyzstan, for transport to Kandahar, Karshi Khanabad and Bagram, Afghanistan.

"Residual" air traffic, such as NATO aircraft, Air National Guard and Air Reserve planes, and any others, will use any available airfields in the European theater.

■ Space-available travel from Ramstein will be canceled Sept. 13-17. From Sept. 18-22, the only space-A travel in Europe will be aboard C-130 "channel" flights within the theater.

Roberts: Iraq, 9/11 report sparked intel plan

By KATHERINE PFLEGER
SHRADER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Pat Roberts says that a year ago, he probably wouldn't have proposed the sweeping intelligence overhaul he brought forward this week.

But given the series of inquiries into the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, the prewar intelligence on Iraq, and the eight years presiding over "Ob-my-God hearings" the Kansas Republican said he saw the need to act.

On Monday, he put forward details of a plan to break up the CIA and rearrange the Pentagon's spy agencies under a single national intelligence director, among a litany of other changes outlined in a 139-page draft bill.

Roberts calls it "a marker" in the debate and said he expects changes. But with the legislation, he has solidified his position as a leading critic of the intelligence community by proposing the most far-reaching intelligence overhaul debated since the Sept. 11 attacks.

Roberts' proposal met immediate and broad resistance Monday. The Intelligence Committee's

A look at Roberts' plan for intelligence gathering

The Associated Press

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., is proposing legislation to overhaul the intelligence community, recreating it as a National Intelligence Service. Among changes he proposes:

■ Create a national intelligence director, as recommended by the Sept. 11 commission, who would have authority over intelligence. The director would oversee four assistant directors for intelligence collection; analysis and production; research, development and acquisition; and military support.

■ Break up the CIA into three parts: a National clandestine Service to direct traditional spy operations; an Office of National Assessments to be responsible for intelligence analysis; and an Office of Technical Support to handle research and development projects.

■ Put three Defense Department agencies under the control of the assistant director for intelligence collection: the National Security Agency, the super-secret code-breakers and code-protections; the National Reconnaissance Office, which operates spy satellites; and the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency, which analyzes the aerial imagery.

■ Make the Defense Intelligence Agency's human intelligence elements an independent agency under the control of the assistant director for collection.

■ Give the assistant director for collection control over the FBI's counterintelligence and counterterrorism divisions. Those units would continue to be subject to Attorney General guidelines and operate within the FBI for administration and support purposes.

■ Create a director of military intelligence — a four-star officer to run the Defense Department's tactical intelligence elements and oversee armed forces conducting intelligence-related work. This commander would report directly to the defense secretary.

top Democrat, Sen. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, said it would be a "severe mistake" to disband the CIA while it is embroiled in the war on terror.

Former CIA Director George Tenet, making his first public statement since he resigned last month, said Roberts' plan showed a "dangerous misunderstanding of the business of intelligence."

President Bush did not endorse Roberts' proposal Monday.

Instead, the president said only that he was interested in finding "the best way to fashion intelligence" so the president and his Cabinet secretaries have got the ability to make good judgment calls.

Bush has supported the need for a national director to oversee all intelligence-gathering, but has yet to detail the powers he wants the office to have.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said he hadn't had a chance to see the restructuring proposal in writing.

"We do need to make significant adjustments in how we collect, communicate and disperse information," Rumsfeld told an audience of about 1,300 troops at Fort Bliss in El Paso, Texas, on Monday.

But he added: "We have to be careful about it. ... You don't want, in the middle of the war, to go tearing up the pea patch."

Roberts surprised Republicans and Democrats alike when he announced on a Sunday morning talk show his proposal to remake the intelligence community by splitting the CIA into three separate agencies, pulling all or part of four defense intelligence agencies out of the Pentagon, and creating a new national intelligence director to oversee the National Intelligence Service he envisions.

On Monday, a defensive Roberts said, "If this proposal seems radical to some ... my response would be: What should we do?"

More than three dozen attempts to reorganize the intelligence community over more than five decades have failed, he said, adding that he spoke last week with colleagues of both parties, and eight of his panel's nine Republicans have agreed that Congress must act.

Democrats, meanwhile, criticized Roberts for not working in a more bipartisan fashion, and demanded more details.

Bridge-filming arrest

BALTIMORE — A man described by federal authorities as an assistant to a top Hamas operative was arrested by Maryland police after he was seen videotaping the Chesapeake Bay Bridge, authorities said Tuesday.

Ismael Selim Elbarasse of Annandale, Va., suspected by federal authorities of having financial ties to the Palestinian terrorist group Hamas, was arrested Friday after two off-duty Baltimore County police officers saw him taping the bridge from a sport utility vehicle, said Marcia Murphy, a spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office in Baltimore.

Contempt order dropped

WASHINGTON — Contempt of court orders against Time magazine and one of its reporters were dismissed after the journalist agreed to give a statement to prosecutors probing the Bush administration leak of a covert CIA officer's identity.

In a statement Tuesday, Time said reporter Matthew Cooper agreed to give a deposition after Lewis "Scooter" Libby, Vice President Dick Cheney's chief of staff, personally released Cooper from a promise of confidentiality to a conversation the two had last year.

Storms hit Midwest

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Thunderstorms raged parts of the Midwest early Tuesday, a day after flash flooding swamped basements, stranded motorists and left some cars floating in water.

The National Weather Service reported some Kansas roadways were 6 inches of water on Monday, when several motorists had to be rescued from their cars.

Thunderstorms in North Dakota downed trees, flooded streets and knocked out power to several thousand people Monday. Golf ball-sized hail was reported in Bismarck, and winds of 70 mph were reported in Riverdale when the storm hit Monday night.

Study: High blood pressure plagues Americans

By JAMIE STENGLE

The Associated Press

DALLAS — Nearly a third of American adults have high blood pressure, putting them at greater risk of stroke, heart attack, kidney failure and other problems, according to a new government analysis.

The obesity epidemic and an aging population are to blame, experts say. Just over a decade ago, closer to one in four Americans had high blood pressure, and two decades ago the rate actually was declining.

About 65 million American adults now have high blood pressure — 30 percent more than the 50 million who did in the previous decade, according to a report published Monday in Hypertension: Journal of the American Heart Association.

"The big message to the American public on that is that we need to pay attention to our lifestyle and those that are overweight need to get slimmer," said Dr. Daniel Jones, dean of the School of Medicine for the University of Mississippi Medical Center and an expert on high blood pressure.

The study didn't examine reasons for the blood pressure spike, but experts said the fact the population is getting older and fatter probably plays a major role.

"It's not surprising because we've seen that Americans are getting fatter, and we know that blood pressure goes up when people gain weight," said Dr. David Goff, an epidemiology expert at Wake Forest University School of Medicine in North Carolina, who was not involved in the analysis, which involved Census Bureau and other health statistics.

The risk of hypertension, or high blood pressure, is increased by old age, excess weight and lack of physical activity. A standard blood pressure reading is given as systolic pressure over diastolic pressure. Systolic, the larger of the two numbers, should ideally be below 120, while the diastolic number should be under 80.

Kerry: 'Fear and smear' is GOP's whole platform

BY MARY DALRYMPLE

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry accused President Bush's campaign and political allies on Tuesday of conducting a campaign of "fear and smear" to avoid talking about jobs, health care and the war in Iraq.

"You can't lead America by misleading the American people," said Kerry, who has been struggling recently days against charges — denounced by Democrats as smear tactics — that he lied about his actions in Vietnam that brought five military medals.

"They have no plans, no positive vision and no understanding of an urgent and undeniable truth: A strong America begins at home," Kerry said.

The Massachusetts senator's speech appeared part of an effort to refocus the campaign on domestic and foreign policy issues, many of which trend his way in the polls. By his own words, it was also an attempt to pre-empt next week's Republican National Convention in New York.

Despite what GOP speakers may claim, he said, "every step of the way, George W. Bush has put the narrow interests of the few ahead of the interests of most Americans." He said the administration has favored tax cuts for the rich, given special access to polluters, rewarded companies that send jobs overseas and sided with big oil.

Next week, he predicted, "they'll bend over backward with last-minute proposals and last-minute promises for all they haven't done and pretend they're not who they are."

"We believe we will be on the ballot in the vast majority of states," said Nader spokesman Kevin Zeese. "But it takes away from media attention we might get otherwise and voters don't get to hear about the issues, only the ballot-access fights."

In his last run for president, Nader was nominated by the Green Party and received 2.7 percent of the vote. This year, at the urging of the Democrats and many former CRAWFORD, Texas — Voters in eight battleground states will be getting a rolling preview of the Republican National Convention in New York City when some of its most prominent speakers join President Bush for a pre-convention campaign swing.

Those traveling with the president include high-profile, independent-minded politicians who could expand his base of support: Rudy Giuliani, the former New York City mayor who led the city's recovery after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks; Sen. Zell Miller, a Georgia Democrat who backs Bush; Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, who has opposed gay marriage in his state; and Arizona Sen. John McCain, a staunch supporter of the president's policies in Iraq.

Bush will visit New Mexico, Florida, Ohio, West Virginia, New Hampshire, Michigan, Tennessee and Iowa before arriving in New York to accept the party's nomination on Sept. 2.

Bush begins his pre-convention tour with three stops in New Mexico on Thursday. Giuliani, who addresses the convention Monday, will be at rallies in Las Cruces, Farmington, and Albuquerque.

On the convention's third day, Bush will rally supporters in Columbus, Ohio, before traveling to New York. Bush will address the convention the next night.

Anti-Kerry book

NEW YORK — Barnes & Noble Inc. said Monday it has been pinched by strong demand for a new book that questions the Vietnam-era actions of Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry.

The nation's largest book store chain also said Republican and Democratic critics have lodged thousands of complaints accusing it of both favoring and suppressing "Unfit for Command."

CEO Steve Riggio said Barnes & Noble has no political agenda.

"Unfit for Command," by John O'Neill and Jerome Corsi, accuses Kerry of lying about his decorated wartime record and betraying comrades by returning from Vietnam with an alleged widespread atrocities by U.S. troops.

Daughters' casting call

WASHINGTON — President Bush's twin daughters are urging young people to vote, saying that schoolwork, parties and extracurricular activities often keep students away from campaigns and voting booths.

Bush's re-election campaign sent out an e-mail Tuesday with a message from Jenna and Barbara Bush, 22, saying that less than half of 18- to 24-year-olds were registered to vote in the last election.

"We are asking you to get involved with this campaign not only because it is the most critical election of our lifetime, but also because we have the ability to positively change our future," they said.

Nader campaign struggles to get his name on ballot

BY JONATHAN FINER AND BRIAN FALER

The Washington Post

Ten weeks before the 2004 presidential election, Ralph Nader's campaign is mired in a painstaking struggle to get his name on the ballot in a host of states he contested four years ago.

Monday Michigan election officials declined over whether to accept his petition to be on the ballot as an independent candidate, which Democrats argued was riddled with fraud, sending the issue to an appeals court.

Earlier in the day, a federal court in Illinois denied Nader's challenge to state election laws, which he said are too hostile to in-

Nader backers, the party, which claims more than 20 automatic slots on state ballots, denied Nader its endorsement.

In several states, the ballot disputes have turned nasty, with Democrats lining up teams of lawyers to scrutinize petitions and allege rampant fraud, and Nader accusing the party of using dirty tricks to keep him off the ballot.

Nader has yet to run a television ad, but at least two Democratic-leaning anti-Nader groups have waged media efforts against him. While Republicans do not deny offering logistical support to Nader's petition efforts in several states, direct financial contributions from those who have also donated to Bush so far amounts to only $54,300, or 4 percent of the $1.5 million he has raised.

Straw calls on Sudan to protect refugees

BY ED JOHNSON

The Associated Press

AL-FASHER, Sudan — British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw, meeting people in the desert and scrubland of troubled Darfur, said Tuesday the Sudanese government would do more to make it safe for them to go home.

Straw's tour of the conflict-ravaged region came as the U.N. deadline neared for Khartoum to disarm Arab militiamen, accused of terrorizing African farmers, or face economic and diplomatic sanctions. Elsewhere, Nigerian mediators struggled to get the Sudanese government and rebels to reach an agreement that could allow for more progress toward calm before the deadline.

More than 30,000 people have been killed and 1.4 million forced to flee their homes in what the United Nations has described as the world's worst humanitarian crisis. Some have gone further, calling it genocide, a designation many believe would force the international community to take strong action.

Straw, whose country has veto power on the Security Council, said officials should be in a position by the end of the week to decide whether Khartoum had made sufficient progress in ending the crisis to avoid sanctions.

Britain's Foreign Secretary Jack Straw, left, meets refugees Tuesday at the Abu Shouk camp in the northern Darfur region of Sudan. Straw said it was clear from the stories he heard from some of the thousands at the camp that many would not return to their villages because of fears of attacks by the Arab militias known as the Janjaweed.

"It is for Kofi Annan to judge the extent to which they have complied," he said before leaving Darfur for talks in the capital with Sudanese President Omar el-Bashir.

Women in brightly colored robes had clustered around Straw at a watering point in the Abu Shouk camp, home to more than 40,000 people and near Al-Fasher, the provincial capital of northern Darfur. Some carried babies in slings on their backs, others let out high-pitched trills in a traditional welcoming cry to the British delegation.

Straw said it was clear from their stories that many would not return to their villages because of fears of attacks by the Arab militias known as the Janjaweed.

He said there had been progress since the Security Council set the Aug. 30 deadline, noting that humanitarian aid groups had been granted access to the western region and that security in the camps had improved.

But "people are still very anxious, apprehensive and nervous about whether they will be safe to go back to the villages from which they have come," Straw said. "There is still a lack of confidence that it is safe for them to return home, and that has got to be pinned down."

Straw said the Sudanese government and two rebel factions which took up arms in February 2003 demanding greater political representation must thrash out a settlement at peace talks held in Abuja, Nigeria, to end the crisis.

Straw did not respond directly when asked whether he saw evidence of ethnic cleansing and genocide.

"The crucial challenge now is not the description, but what we do about the problem and how we try to turn it around," Straw said.

Ex-roommate testifies 9/11 suspect not violent

BY CLAUD-PETER TIEMANN

The Associated Press

HAMBURG, Germany — A former roommate of a Moroccan charged with helping the Sept. 11 hijackers testified Tuesday that Moumin el Motassadeq disliked the United States but "was not a violent individual" despite his friendship with the group around lead suicide pilot Mohamed Atta.

Necidi Aydin, a 32-year-old Turk, shared accommodations with el Motassadeq from late 1996 until July 1999 while the two were students in Hamburg.

Motassadeq had a negative attitude toward the United States," Aydin recalled during testimony to the state court in Hamburg. But conversations over dinner with Atta and other suspected members of the Hamburg al-Qaida cell focused on general topics such as their homelands, Islam, and their studies, he added.

"Motassadeq had nothing to hide," Aydin said. "Actually he was very quiet."

Aydin portrayed el Motassadeq as a sensitive man, recalling arguments over the noise made by the Moroccan's friends that ended with him in tears.

"He was not a violent individual," Aydin said.

El Motassadeq is being retried after his conviction for helping Sept. 11, 2001, pilots Atta, Marwan al-Shehhi and Ziad Jarrah was overturned in March on appeal. A federal court ruled he was unfairly denied evidence from U.S.-held al-Qaida suspects—including Ramzi Binalshibh, the suspected contact between the Hamburg cell and al-Qaida.

Frenchmen recall bitter war against Germany

BY MORT ROSENBLUM

The Associated Press

PARIS — The Champs-Élysées, free at last, was awash with wild joy on Aug. 25, 1944. But deep in the heart of France the war raged on, with Frenchmen killing Frenchmen to aid a desperate Germany.

And now, 60 years on, people who suffered most are among the staunchest supporters of a new Europe in which France and Germany are, essentially, just two members of a 25-nation super-state.

"This is the great triumph of the 21st century," said Jean-Marie Delabre, 81. "Peace is accepting the idea that you must live with others and forge natural differences into something stronger."

He added: "I don't think I'd have said that a few years after the war." While Paris celebrated, his Resistance unit fought on near Dijon. Captured, he was in German prison camps until armistice in May 1945.

With time, Delabre decided that since wars are much easier to start than to finish, the only answer is to avoid them.

"A united Europe is a lesson for the rest of the world," he concluded.

A war that left millions dead had not only pitted France against its ancient neighbor and foe, but it also forced deep divisions among the French themselves. Some resisted, but many collaborated.

People who remember Aug. 25, 1944, are celebrating it with a bitter-sweet mix of emotions. For many, the horror and humiliation of occupation did not sink in until years, if not decades, later.

Flights canceled

LONDON — Thousands of British Airways passengers have been stranded by canceled flights and lengthy delays at Heathrow Airport because of staff shortages and technical problems at the airline.

British Airways canceled 21 flights to and from short-haul destinations in Britain and Europe on Tuesday — a day after the airline scrapped 25 flights to the United States and other European destinations.

It urged all passengers to consult its Web site before traveling to Heathrow.

The airline estimated around 5,000 passengers have been affected so far and at least another 2,500 would be affected Tuesday.

The airline, which is recruiting more staff, said it was around 120 staff short at Heathrow.

End of a pear tree

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — It stood for 350 years, bearing fruit for a dozen generations, but strong winds finally brought down what is believed to be the oldest pear tree in Scandinavia.

Since the mid-1600s, the massive pear tree had helped feed the people outside Enköpings, an hour's drive west of Stockholm.

On Saturday night, as Alf and Eivor Svantesson were going to bed, the tree fell outside their house in a cur-splintering crack. Strong winds had been blowing in the area in the past few days, Eivor Svantesson said. The trunk had rotted from the inside, she said.

OPINION

U.S., allies must effect Sudan regime change

BY ERIC REEVES

The horrors in Darfur mark this century's first great venture in genocide, but they are not the first such action perpetrated by the National Islamic Front regime ruling Sudan. That distinction goes to the jihad directed against the various African peoples of the Nuba Mountains beginning in 1992. Genocide began again in the vast oil concessions of southern Sudan in 1998, when the African peoples of the region became targets of a systematic policy of scorched-earth clearances. Many hundreds of thousands were killed or displaced.

Khartoum's genocide in Darfur is both familiar and different. It is, as seasoned Sudan analyst Alex de Waal has argued, "the routine cruelty of a security cabal, its humanity withered by years in power; it is genocide by force of habit." Confronted with a surprisingly robust military insurgency in Darfur — growing out of decades of economic marginalization and a near-total breakdown in civilian security — the government in Khartoum instinctively responded by organizing and deploying the Janjaweed Arab militia, which has brutally and systematically destroyed the means of agricultural production throughout Darfur, focusing almost exclusively on African tribal groups. These people now confront "conditions of life calculated to bring about their physical destruction." They face genocide.

No reasonable world order can tolerate a serially genocidal regime that rules only by virtue of ruthless survivalism. Yet this is what the United Nations appears prepared to do. A July 30 U.N. Security Council resolution on Darfur was an exercise in temporizing. Veto-wielding China and Russia, as well as Pakistan and Algeria, resisted all meaningful action; both China and Pakistan abstained in the final vote, signaling that nothing further will be done when the Security Council takes up Darfur again on Sunday.

In the distorting shadow of the Iraq war, this is an exceedingly difficult moment to argue for "regime change" in Khartoum. But regime change alone can end genocide as the domestic security policy of choice in Sudan. And it is the only thing that can avert the deaths of hundreds of thousands in Darfur. The mismatch between humanitarian need and capacity grows more deadly each day. And Khartoum is strenuously resisting deployment of any peacekeeping force, even from the African Union.

[O]ne consequence of the Iraq war ... is that public discussion of regime change by the United States will resonate much more deeply in Khartoum's despotic thinking.

peace process since Sudan's independence in 1956. The only arguments against regime change are those of realism (the regime is Sudan's de facto government) and practicability (how can Sudan's governance be taken into international receivership?).

But years in power cannot legitimize regimes like Khartoum's to believe they are invulnerable and act accordingly. Even from the realist perspective, accepttance of rule by those who commit genocide is counterproductive to regional and world order; it also offers encouragement to other regimes tempted to use genocide as a political weapon.

To the second objection — how will it be done? — there are certainly no easy answers. But one consequence of the Iraq war (though of course not a justification in itself) is that public discussion of regime change by the United States will resonate much more deeply in Khartoum's despotic thinking. If it is coupled with serious efforts to work with our European allies to squeeze Khartoum by means of comprehensive economic sanctions, as well as sanctions targeted against NIF leaders, we may first be able to secure a permissive environment for humanitarian intervention in Darfur, saving hundreds of thousands of lives.

If regime change is not to be chaotic, it must be organized by a consortium of international actors, including regional governments; efforts must be made to reach out to all opposition parties throughout the country and in exile. A proportionately representative interim governing council must be created externally but be ready to move quickly to take control when the NIF is removed by whatever means are necessary. The great risk is an implosion of the military that sustains NIF power, but this risk is as great as any other effort of regime change.

The challenges adumbrated here are daunting and politically risky. The consequences of failing to accept these challenges are continuation of genocidal rule and additional hundreds of thousands of deaths.

What matters most, life savings or saving lives?

BY FRANK J. GAFFNEY JR.

For the first time since Sept. 11, 2001, Americans have a chance to do something that millions of us have yearned to do: help win the war on terror.

Millions of people who invest in public pension plans can act to deny upward of $70 billion to nations that finance, train, arm and otherwise sponsor terrorist enemies of the United States. The Center for Security Policy, in a report titled "Terrorist Investment of the 50 States" (www.DivestTerror.org), identifies where much of this money goes and through which companies.

There can be little doubt about the effect of keeping such immense sums out of the hands of the Iranian, Libyan, Syrian, North Korean and Sudanese regimes. They would have less money to fund their terrorist allies, less money to buy or build weapons of mass destruction, less money to threaten U.S. interests and allies. It might even precipitate the sort of cash-flow crisis that ultimately destroyed the Soviet Union — catalyzing regime changes where they would do the most good without firing a shot.

How could American investors help bring about these sorts of desirable outcomes? The same way they helped cause an end two decades ago to apartheid in South Africa — divesting stock where it counted.

This time, there are roughly 400 companies that could be targeted for doing business with terrorist-sponsoring regimes. The new report shows that the leading American public pension funds alone have invested about $200 billion in such companies, representing an average 15 percent of the assets of their respective portfolios. The largest, the California Public Employee Retirement System, has about $18 billion invested in 201 such companies.

In a recent letter to the heads of the top 100 American public pension funds and the state officials responsible for them, Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., called the business these firms are doing with state sponsors of terror "unconscionable."

The good news is that subscribers to American public pension plans and other institutional and private investors have real leverage. They can demand that their money be invested only with companies that choose not to do business with hostile governments — through shareholder resolutions, for instance. Should even one of this country's large public pension funds divest in this fashion, an unmistakable signal would be sent to companies the world over. You can enjoy the benefits of being highly regarded in the American capital market or you can do business with those who sponsor our terrorist foes.

The bad news is that so far almost none of the 87 public pension systems in the center's study appear to be even interested in acquiring data about which companies in their portfolios have business activities in these rogue states. Worst of all, those with fiduciary responsibility for these funds continue investing heavily in companies partnered with governments helping U.S. enemies.

This situation should be intolerable to all Americans. Correcting it clearly should be part of a comprehensive strategy for winning the war on terror. Investors must do their part.

Saving the panthers

FL PORT MYERS — A federal judge revoked a permit to develop a limestone mine amid 6,000 acres of habitat that could be used by the endangered Florida panther.

The National Wildlife Federation, which sued to stop the development, alleged the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers violated the Endangered Species Act and the Clean Water Act by issuing permits for the mine.

Panthers have been recorded at or near Florida Rock Industries' project site, near Fort Myers' Southwest International Airport. Fewer than 100 panthers remain in Florida.

Lottery trial scratched

MA BOSTON — A former convenience store clerk will keep collecting winnings from a $4 million lottery ticket after a Massachusetts judge declared a mistrial in a dispute over ownership of the ticket.

After nearly four days of deliberations, the Barnstable Superior Court jury deadlocked over whether the winning ticket properly belonged to Julie Prive, or to Falmouth retiree who sued to claim the prize.

Prive has been collecting winnings on the ticket — $200,000 a year for 20 years before taxes — since 2002. Lottery officials say they will keep paying unless a court rules otherwise.

Prive had regularly collected discarded scratch tickets and entered them in the lottery's second-chance game designed to prevent litter. While double-checking the used tickets, she said she found a winner worth $4 million.

But Raymond MacDonald and Monica Hertz claim the winning ticket — No. 93 in the book of $10 tickets — was among the 45 tickets they bought May 17, 2002.

HI HONOLULU — The Hawaiian Homes Commission has decided to open a Big Island cave complex to determine if reburied ancient Hawaiian artifacts are still there.

Commission chairman Micah Kane said that a policy barring access to the Kawaihau caves will remain in force while a federal probe continues into whether some other reburied artifacts ended up being offered for sale.

The request for access came from Laakea Suganuma, who represents claimants who have complained the Kawaihau artifacts were reinterred four years ago without their claims being fully heard.

Suganuma asked for access after recent reports that artifacts buried in nearby Kanupa Cave turned up for sale at an antiques shop. The U.S. Interior Department is investigating.

OK OKLAHOMA CITY — An Oklahoma City man has been arrested in connection with 15 bank robberies in six Oklahoma cities.

Gerard Bennett, 31, was arrested by FBI agents outside an Oklahoma City hotel after a short foot chase.

Bennett was arraigned on 15 counts of bank robbery and six counts of using a minor in a crime of violence. U.S. Magistrate Judge Robert Bacharach ordered that Bennett be detained.

According to a federal grand jury indictment, Bennett intentionally used one or two people younger than 18 in six of the Oklahoma robberies.

reservations. In a 2 to 1 ruling, the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the Coeur d'Alene, Nez Perce and Shoshone-Bannock Tribes that such taxation violated tribal sovereignty and could create a barrier to interstate commerce.

Clay Smith, the attorney who argued the case for the state, said it was too soon to know if the state would seek an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. That decision would be made by the tax commission after consulting with Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, he said.

Nez Perce Tribal Chairman Anthony Johnson said he was happy with the ruling.

"We're pleased that the court has upheld the tribes' sovereignty, and has disallowed the state's intrusion on the tribes' basic governmental powers," Johnson said.

Wheely bad ride

NY PHOENICIA — A Ferris wheel at an Ulster County fire department fund-raiser spun out of control after a cable snapped, coming to a halt only after nearly two dozen firefighters at the fire grabbed the wheel and brought it under control, police said.

None of the seven passengers was hurt, but several children were temporarily stranded in suspended cars and the ride's operator suffered a minor arm injury, said Officer Thomas O'Connell of the Town of Shandaken police.

The incident began at Parish Field in Phoenicia, where a fund-raiser for the Phoenicia Fire Department was being held, police said.

After the cable snapped, the ride's operator tried to use the hand brake to stop the wheel from spinning. But the wheel continued to speed up, police said.

"It was really scary — it looked like a roulette wheel when you spin it. I'm surprised nobody got thrown off," O'Connell said.

Twenty firefighters swarmed the ride, stopping it and freeing two adult riders from the bottom car. Five children were stranded in upper cars until firefighters used a ladder truck to free them.

Less means more

LA NEW ORLEANS — The National Marine Fisheries Service released a much-anticipated draft of a study on how to save the struggling shrimp industry in the Gulf of Mexico and South Atlantic.

The agency said cutting down on the number of shrimp boats is a top priority. Possibilities mentioned in the report include a moratorium on new licenses and a government buyback of licenses and boats.

"We're producing about all we're going to produce as a system and I think the industry has to look at how to distribute that catch," said William Hogarth, assistant administrator of the Fisheries Service. "If it's going to be an open-access fishery then it will be difficult to keep up the profitability."

The industry, hit hard by imports which now make up 87 percent of the market, is waging a trade battle with six of the largest shrimp-producing countries. Last month, the U.S. Commerce Department ruled in favor of imposing tariffs on shrimp from those countries.

$2M cleanup project

UT ALTA — Texas oilman Dick Bass invested nearly every dollar he ever earned and borrowed millions more to develop his Snowbird ski resort, and he wasn't eager to touch the mining waste he inherited on resort lands. It could make him liable under federal law for an expensive reclamation.

"I owe so much money my tail is puckerd to my tonsils every waking moment," Bass, 74, of Dallas said Wednesday.

But now Snowbird resort is joining an unusual partnership with the U.S. Forest Service, the conservation group Trout Unlimited and Tiffany & Co. to finish cleaning up the acidic pollution leaching heavy metals into American Fork river.

The $2 million project, taking place on a patchwork of federal and private lands, couldn't be done on federal dollars alone, Forest Service Chief Dale Bosworth said.

Bosworth said the Utah partnership could serve as a template for cleanup projects around the West, where mining waste has polluted the headwaters of 40 percent of all watersheds.

RI PROVIDENCE — Public school students in Rhode Island will have their academic progress tracked by a new identification system.

The 10-digit number, called a universal student identifier, will allow districts to follow the performance of all students from elementary school through high school, The Providence Journal reported.

The identifier number is randomly generated by a computer and is confidential, state education officials say. The state assigns a number to each child and then that ID number is sent back to the district, which merges it with the child's records.

Although the Federal No Child Left Behind law doesn't require that states adopt a universal ID system, it does require that states gather test-score data based on ethnicity, income, gender and disability. Without some kind of identification system, states could not assemble and sort all of this information.

At least 33 states have adopted some form of identifier, and, like Rhode Island, most have chosen a system in which the number is assigned by the state education department.

Training in Indian issues

MI EAST LANSING — A Native American law program to be launched this fall at Michigan State University College of Law will train future lawyers in Indian issues ranging from gaming to taxes.

The program will provide law students with a more specialized background and let them work with tribal governments on policy-making decisions, research and infrastructure plans.

"Many people, including the public and law students and even practicing attorneys, are simply unfamiliar with tribal governments at all except for an occasional casino reference," said assistant professor Donald Laverdure, director of the program.

The program's four classes include one in which law students will work with tribal governments on everything from developing tax codes to zoning regulations.

Only 20 law schools nationwide have formal Indian law programs. Fewer than 1 percent of lawyers in the United States are Native Americans.

Black bear ruling

NH CONCORD — In what the Fish and Game Department says may be a precedent-setting case, a Shelburne man has been convicted of shooting a black bear raiding a bird feeder in his back yard.

Fish and Game Lieutenant Doug Grelenski said that Jocelyn Labonville had complained twice to conservation officers that a black bear was raiding his bird feeders and he was concerned for his grandchildren's safety.

Grelenski said Labonville was told to stop feeding birds and the bear problem would go away but he shot and killed the bear while it fed at his bird feeder on June 14.

Labonville was convicted in Gorham District Court of taking wildlife during a closed season. He was fined $240 and will lose his hunting license for one year.

Several states, including Vermont, New York and Pennsylvania, have laws prohibiting direct and indirect feeding of black bears.

Auto collision kills 2

NC LILLINGTON — Two people believed to be a mother and her child died in a collision with a car carrying five robbery suspects who were being chased by police.

According to authorities, the men, who may have been trying to rob a bank were speeding in their car when it struck the woman's Jaguar as she tried to enter N.C. 210 from the parking lot of a shopping center.

The five suspects, who were in a Lincoln Town Car, and the driver of another vehicle involved were hurt and taken to a hospital, Harnett County Sheriff Larry Rollins said.

A worker at the First National Bank in Erwin called police after she noticed men who were trying to hide their faces. She locked the door and the men left the bank.

Emergency rooms close

CA LOS ANGELES — Financial problems caused mainly by the treatment of uninsured patients have forced two emergency rooms to close in Los Angeles County, raising concerns that other facilities may be overwhelmed.

The latest emergency room closings are the fifth and sixth in two years, causing some officials to worry about a shortage of emergency care in the state's most populous region.

"We cannot stand any more closures in an emergency system capacity in Los Angeles since this system is on the brink of absolute chaos," said Jim Loft, executive vice president of the Hospital Association of Southern California.

They blamed a decrease in reimbursements for treatment of uninsured patients, many of whom use the emergency room as their primary care facility.

Usher has no beef with Timberlake

R&B crooner Usher swears he has no beef with Justin Timberlake.

"I'm not in competition with Justin. I'm not in competition with anyone but myself," he told The Boston Globe in Friday's editions. "I'm not looking for that bad-boy image. I'm not a person who goes out looking for trouble."

Usher

It's been suggested that the two singers are less-than-friendly rivals, especially after Timberlake, the former 'N Sync leader, was anointed by Rolling Stone magazine as "the new King of Pop" over Usher.

Usher's latest album, "Confessions," has sold more than 5 million copies. Its singles include the infectious dance hit "Yeah!," "Burn" and "Confessions Part II."

"It's not just about a hit record, it's not just the marketing behind an album, it's about the talent, and I go out there and I work hard," he said. "No one can just take your spot. If you really work hard, no one can take your spot."

Oh, Ellen! DeGeneres to play God

Comedian is getting a promotion — to supreme being. DeGeneres will star as God in a remake of the 1977 comedy "Oh, God!" The original starring George Burns and Jack Lemmon was a comedy about a supermarket manager passed as a new prophet. Jerry Weintraub, who produced the original movie and also will oversee the remake, said he'll hire a screenwriter and director with the aim to shoot the movie during a break in DeGeneres' schedule from her talk show next summer.

Though successful on the small screen, DeGeneres misfired in an earlier transition to film with the romantic-comedy flop "Mr. Wrong." She helped score a hit with her voice work on last year's animated tale "Finding Nemo."

Fame 'Feels Like Home' for Jones

Norah Jones says she's finally adjusting to all the attention and all that fame.

Two years after her smash album "Come Away With Me" made her a household name, Jones released "Feels Like Home" and waited for the new wave of hype. Her first album sold 18 million copies and netted eight Grammy Awards. Her latest has sold about five million copies.

Jones

Everywhere she turned, it seemed, her face was on some magazine cover.

"I'm starting to enjoy it finally," the singer-musician told The Baltimore Sun in Friday's editions. "In the beginning, it was freaky. I'm just a musician, you know, and all of a sudden I'm supposed to be this star."

Jones said she stopped reading articles about herself early on.

"People think I'm really melancholy and romantic and all whimsy," she said. "I'm not at all. I'm very direct."

Author's latest book has a 'batty' idea

Author Jacquelyn Mitchard hates that bats get a bad rap.

"I love bats," said Mitchard, who lives on a farm near Madison, Wis. "Little brown bats, they're my friends. They eat twice their weight in mosquitoes every night."

Her second children's book "Baby Bat's Lullaby" is about a bat who has to convince a child to sleep during the day because it is a nocturnal creature. It was released Tuesday.

After the release of her first children's book, "Starring Prima," Mitchard began thinking about another topic.

"The germ of this idea was planted when we were cleaning the barn for my assistant's wedding," she said. "I found a small bat buried in the hay and held him in my hand for a moment, and saw how sweet and tender it was before it took off flying."

From silly to serious

Jamie Foxx makes smooth transition into dramatic acting

BY ANTHONY BREZNICAN

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES

Jamie Foxx is a hero, an idol, an inspiration to a guy like Eric Bishop.

Foxx is the former "In Living Color" comic making his breakthrough as a lead in a drama this year with "Collateral," opposite Tom Cruise, and "Ray," in which he steps behind the dark glasses and glorious smile of the late legend Ray Charles.

Eric Bishop is Jamie Foxx's real name. "Jamie Foxx is the Superman, and Eric Bishop is the Clark Kent," the 36-year-old actor replied, smiling as if he was conveying the coolest secret in the world.

Bishop was the kid from Terrell, Texas, who dreamed of being a star. It almost didn't matter what kind of star: singer, actor, comedian, athlete. The high school football player was good at all those things.

But Jamie Foxx, the one sitting in his luxury bungalow at the Beverly Hills Hotel, with two solid gold dog tags lined with diamonds hanging from his neck, is the one who made it happen.

He's the brash, clever, ambitious alter-ego who wasn't content to rely on luck. He wasn't even content to rely on his natural talent, at least when it came to getting noticed.

Jamie Foxx is the trick name that got him noticed during an open mic night at a club in the early 1990s.

"I wrote down all these unisex names at this comedy place because they would always choose the girls to go up," Foxx recalled. "They picked randomly from a list. So I wrote down Stacy King, Tracy Brown, Jamie Foxx ... And they picked Jamie Foxx. I go up, had a great night and that's how the name stuck."

Foxx is notable for being one of the few comics to make a transition from slapstick to serious.

Foxx says he made the switch by making good impressions on the right people.

Oliver Stone gave him his first dramatic role as a football star in 1999's "Any Given Sunday." When director Michael Mann was casting "Ali," he took Will Smith's advice and cast Foxx as Boudin Brown, Muhammad Ali's manager.

Foxx recounts his casting experience with dead-on impressions of his directors and fellow actors.

He reteamed with Mann for "Collateral," playing a cab driver named Max, who through a cascade of bad luck is forced by Bishop's assassin to drive him around Los Angeles for a string of late-night murders.

"He's the realist, sort of the nerd, the square guy," Foxx said. Max doesn't necessarily want to be a hero.

"He just wants it all to go away."

But the story reveals Max as more than just "reluctant accomplice": he's a man with failed dreams — his own high-class limo service, a vacation to a tropical isle — who talks big but never made it happen, and probably never will.

He is, in other words, the exact opposite of Jamie Foxx.

"I'm a go-getter, I'm a horse, I'm a dog," the actor said.

Foxx compared working with Cruise to a game of tennis (evidence, again, that his whole mind-set is sports-themed). "You watch Tom Cruise, and he hits the ball back to you," Foxx said. "When you play tennis, there's a rally and a rhythm. ... Here's a guy who is at the top of the food chain and still wants to work. That means you got to burn."

No sooner do the words leave Foxx's lips than Cruise himself thrusts open the door to the darkened bungalow, grunting the famous Tom Cruise smile and asking, once again, for the CD of Foxx's music — which is now out of print.

"I got that stuff right here," Foxx says, gesturing toward the bedroom.

"I'm shocked," Cruise replies — and looks it.

"Every day I'd go bang on his trailer," Cruise said.

"Where's the video?" He says, "Ah, I forgot ... Kids and everybody are telling me 'Jamie's got these great songs' ... And I say, 'Yeah, he's been TELLING me about this.'"

Foxx looks both embarrassed and appreciative. He released an album titled "Peep This" in 1994, but now downplays his music interests, saying the pop charts don't have much room for his style. "I wanted to do singing, but I'm glad I didn't. The music thing isn't cracking. R&B singers are dead. Hip-hop killed the R&B singer," Foxx said.

He'll get to show off some of his musical skill when "Ray" opens on Oct. 29. Although he lip-synces to Charles' voice, the late musician (who died after filming finished) gave him piano lessons for the role.

When asked to talk about "Ray," Foxx barely says a word before Cruise interrupts to praise his dead-on impersonation.

"Let me tell you about 'Ray,'" Cruise says. "When [Foxx] came in and we met — the three of us, with Michael Mann — in about two seconds we said,

"Hey, you're working on 'Ray'? And he just did Ray Charles. Inside and out, it wasn't an imitation. He WAS Ray Charles. I sat back and went, 'You've got to be [kidding] me.'"

Foxx's grin and doesn't say anything — just basks in the praise and waits for Cruise to finish.

With admirers like that, who needs Eric Bishop?

While honing his craft as a comedian, Eric Bishop became Jamie Foxx. He has evolved once again — into Jamie Foxx, dramatic actor, in films such as "Collateral."

Horoscope

The key to success during a Capricorn moon is to make sure you're going through the proper channels. This trait is all about respect, tradition and status. Social groups are like delicate systems. There is a hierarchy in every set, no matter how egalitarian the group claims to be. Observe social interaction until you understand how things work.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY

AUGUST 25. Love is at the top of your list this year, and you'll receive the selfless care and adoration you project onto others. You're also quite bold this year. You feel free to experiment with your life and try on a new job, location or image in the next three months. By November, you will have completed a transformation. Love signs are Taurus and Cancer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19).

The stars reflect back to you what you project to others, especially those casual, daily gestures you wouldn't give a second thought to. Consider what you might be doing that doesn't coincide with the person you are inside.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20).

Don't underestimate the power of influence now. You are quite susceptible to it, and in fact, you're a skillful executor of even the trickiest instructions. Commanding words will move you to amazing feats! You'll learn quickly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21).

Your main question now centers around the word "enough." (Do you have enough? What is enough? When is it ever enough?) Building a reserve in different areas of your life will help ease your mind.

CANCER (June 22-July 22).

There's a transformation taking place. Something you've been working on for a long time is now happening, and it could make you feel a mix of emotion: awe, fear, excitement and trepidation. In all, a valid response.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22).

When the 911 Commission proclaimed that one of the government's most costly errors was a "lack of imagination," it pointed out the tremendous importance of this most uniquely human quality. Make use of your fertile imagination now.

tion," it pointed out the tremendous importance of this most uniquely human quality. Make use of your fertile imagination now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22).

You're really in the swing of things. The prevalent feeling this afternoon is one of fondness — it's not dramatic and driving, but you're as comfortable around a special person as you are in an old pair of jeans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23).

Being a winner at work is simple but not easy. Follow this formula, and you'll soon be in line for a higher position with more pay. Plan what you intend to do, execute concisely, and be relevant to the action at hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21).

As a confidant and friend, you may find yourself in a precarious position. Somebody is counting on you to tell the truth or reveal all while another person is counting on you for secrecy. Your choice depends on your character.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21).

Your worst weakness is featured, but it's not as bad as it sounds. This quality or habit also happens to be the key to your strength. If you can stop trying to hide your fault and in fact embrace it, you'll see another side to it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19).

Your sensitivity is acute — you'll know how people around you are feeling before they know themselves. In fact, you'll be aware of the emotional undercurrents in every situation you encounter. This is especially true at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18).

You're dedicated to your relationships, and this loyalty attracts even more friends to your side. People around you may be engaging in unwise behavior, but as your mother used to say, that doesn't mean you have to do as well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20).

You would love to spend the day in dreamland, but the practical part of you thinks this is a waste of time. Be assured it's not! You've got to fortify your desire to succeed, or you'll lose your motivation in the middle of the project.

Man can't keep lid on sex secret

Dear Abby: "Lindsey" and I are co-workers. We have known each other nearly 10 years. We slept together on a recent business trip, and I agreed to keep it between us. I didn't keep my promise, and it got back to Lindsey.

She is terribly hurt, and sadly, I can't undo the wrong I've done. As a result, I have lost a friend and will always regret what I did.

Lindsey told me she had denied that anything happened between us to the person who approached her. She asked me to do the same and say that it was all a joke — that I had made up the story about our being together.

But I don't think it's a good idea for me to compound the situation with a lie. I don't see how it would make things better. Should I grant her this favor?

— Mr. Big Mouth in Brooklyn
Dear Mr. Big: Yes, you could grant her this favor.

Considering the damage you have done to your friend's reputation by crowing, a little white lie is not too much to ask.

Dear Abby: My oldest daughter is being married. Her mother is my ex-wife. My daughter-in-law wants me and my new wife to attend the wedding. Her mother says she will not attend if my wife is there. I should point out that my wife and I will be helping out financially. Her mother will be helping out minimally. Is it appropriate for my new wife to attend with me?

— Father of the Bride in Arizona

Dear Father: If your current wife was the reason for your divorce, then your former wife's feelings are understandable. However, since your daughter has stated that she would like your new wife to attend, it is appropriate that she be there. One way you could solve this problem would be for you and your former wife to be seated as far apart as possible on this special day. I hope she will consider this compromise.

Dear Abby: I hired a cleaning lady who came well-recommended. At first I was pleased, as she did what needed to be done.

Now I have discovered that some nice pieces of jewelry are missing. She is the only person, other than my husband of 54 years, who has been in the upstairs of our home. I have no proof that she took these items of jewelry.

How should I handle this?

— Mrs. B. in San Francisco
Dear Mrs. B.: By all means talk to your housekeeper.

Explain that you can't find the missing jewelry. Ask her if she can help you locate it. If they don't turn up, it's time to call the police and file a report.

Fiance still speaks with ex-girlfriend

Dear Annie: I have been engaged to "Jeff," a terrific man, for eight months. We both have been married before, and between the two of us, we have five children.

The thing that really bothers me is that Jeff stays in touch with his ex-girlfriend, "Elaine," whom he dated on and off for several years after his divorce. He and Elaine had a tumultuous relationship and broke up six months before we met. The reason they couldn't stay together is because she could not deal with his children.

Jeff and I recently bought a house together. I have no reason to distrust him, but I cannot get over the fact that he still talks to Elaine, even though I've told him how I feel. He tells me he will eventually phase her out, but he doesn't want to make an enemy of her. Also, her parents are his clients.

I don't want to be a jealous

shrew, but I have a hard time knowing my future husband stays in touch with a woman he slept with.

Jeff has been nothing but wonderful, honest and supportive in all other areas, and I don't want to make a mountain out of a molehill, but this weighs on my mind. Is it unreasonable to ask him to stop speaking to her?

— Morristown, N.J.

Dear Morristown: It is not unreasonable, but it is unwise.

How often does Jeff speak to Elaine? If it's more than once a week, you can ask him to cut back, but otherwise, leave it alone. You say he is honest and you trust him, plus there are business reasons for remaining cordial. Let Jeff cut the cord his own way. He will appreciate your confidence in him.

Dear Annie: I am planning to marry "Bob" next year. His family is quite wealthy, and mine is not. We don't want a lavish wedding — something simple, yet memorable.

My parents are not able to pay for everything, and I feel Bob's family could contribute more. However, they have not offered, and I don't know how to approach them. I already feel out-of-place with my in-laws because of the financial disparity between our families. Please tell me how to handle this. My parents are in dire straits.

— Bride in Alabama

Dear Bride: First, scale back your wedding plans so your parents don't have to go into debt. Then, discuss the finances with your fiancé. It is not unusual these days for both sets of parents to split the cost of a wedding. If Bob thinks his parents might be willing to pay for more, He should be the one to approach them.

Lilly strikes out 13 to end Boston's six-game run

Ted Lilly (9-8) set a Blue Jays record Monday for strikeouts by a left-hander.

Jays lefty outduels Martinez in 3-0 win

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Ted Lilly thoroughly enjoyed ending Boston's six-game winning streak with a record-setting performance.

Lilly struck out a career-high 13 in a three-hit shutout, leading the Toronto Blue Jays past Pedro Martinez and the Red Sox 3-0 Monday night. Lilly (9-8) set a club mark for strikeouts by a left-hander — the previous record of 11 was accomplished twice by David Wells and once by Al Leiter.

"I'll certainly look back and be pretty happy about this," said Lilly, who entered 0-3 with a 5.26 ERA in 10 career games against the Red Sox, including nine starts.

Reed Johnson hit a leadoff homer against Martinez (13-5), sending the last-place Blue Jays to their fourth consecutive victory. Lilly walked two and threw 126 pitches in his second career shutout and fourth complete game.

"He was fun to watch tonight," Martinez said.

Manny Ramirez doubled in the first, Mark Bellhorn tripled in the fifth and Orlando Cabrera singled in the eighth for Boston's only hits.

"I had three or four pitches working the whole time," said Lilly, whose previous high of 11 strikeouts was set on June 22, 2002, when he pitched his first shutout with Oakland. "You can't beat a team like that with one pitch."

Lilly struck out a club-record six straight between the first and third innings. The previous record was five, last done by Chris Carpenter on Sept. 4, 2001, against the New York Yankees.

"He got us tonight," Boston's Johnny Damon said. "It was a great outing, but nothing is going to shake this team."

The Red Sox fell 6½ games behind first-place New York in the AL East. They trailed by 10½ on Aug. 15.

Jason Varitek, Boston's best hitter this month, dropped his appeal Monday of a four-game suspension for his part in a bench-clearing brawl with the Yankees last month.

Replacement Doug Mirabeli went 0-for-4 with two strikeouts.

Martinez struck out 10 and allowed three runs and four hits in seven innings in sixth start against Toronto this year.

Johnson led off the first inning with a homer, the fifth time Toronto has started the first with a home run this season. Orlando Hudson followed with a triple before Vernon Wells hit a sacrifice fly, making it 2-0.

Hudson led off the third with a walk, advanced to third on Carlos Delgado's single and scored on Eric Hinske's RBI single.

The Blue Jays hit 4 of 15 before their current winning streak.

Bonderman blanks White Sox

The Associated Press

DETROIT — Jeremy Bonderman went to the mound planning to just throw the ball without thinking. That approach worked wonders against the Chicago White Sox.

Bonderman struck out a career-high 14, walked one and scattered seven hits in his first career shutout, leading the Detroit Tigers to a 7-0 victory Monday.

"I totally just went to the basics and went after guys," he said. "I was not thinking about anything. I should've been doing that all year, but sometimes you get in a funk and you start thinking."

Bonderman (7-10) threw his first career complete game to win for the first time since July 6. He was 0-4 in his past eight starts.

The 21-year-old right-hander was 6-19 last year after jumping to the majors following one season with Oakland's Class-A affiliate.

"He dominated," Chicago's Ben Davis said. "That's the best stuff — hands down — I've seen all year."

Bonderman was two strikeouts short of the club record — set by Mickey Lolich twice in 1969. His 14 strikeouts were the most since Lolich struck out 15 in 1972. The last Detroit pitcher 21 or younger to throw a shutout was Dan Petry in 1980.

"For a 21-year-old kid, that was pretty special," Tigers manager Alan Trammell said. "That's going to rank up there among the better performances in Tigers history."

Carlos Guillen backed Bonderman's outstanding start with a two-run homer for Detroit, which has won five of seven.

Jose Contreras (11-6) lost for the first time since being acquired from the New York Yankees on July 31. He gave up five runs and six hits in five innings, and walked a career-high seven.

The White Sox, who have lost five straight, were a season-high 10 games above .500 on July 24 and leading the AL Central. Since then, they have lost 20 of 28 with Frank Thomas (ankle) and Magglio Ordonez (knee) out with injuries.

In other AL games on Monday:

Yankees 6, Indians 4: Gary Sheffield hit a tie-breaking, two-run homer in the ninth inning as New York sent host Cleveland to its eighth straight loss.

The Yankees won for only the second time in eight games and snapped a three-game losing streak.

Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter came in in the ninth after he bruised his left elbow when he was hit by a pitch from Bob Wickman. X-rays were negative, and Jeter expects to play Tuesday.

Twins 7, Rangers 4: Johan Santana allowed one run in eight innings to win his seventh straight decision, and visiting Minnesota padded its lead in the AL Central to eight games.

Santana (14-6) gave up four hits, struck out 11 and walked one to help the Twins win for the seventh time in eight games. Santana surpassed 200 strikeouts this season — the first Twins pitcher with that many since Bert Blyleven had 215 in 1986.

Kenny Rogers (15-6) allowed six runs and 10 hits in 5½ innings for Texas, which has lost two straight following an eight-game winning streak and remained a game behind Boston in the wild-card race.

Athletics 4, Orioles 3: Jermaine Dye hit a tying single in the sixth and Adam Melhuse followed with a go-ahead single, leading host Oakland over former teammate Miguel Tejada and Baltimore.

Tim Lincecum (9-4) pitched 7½ solid innings to beat the Orioles for the second time in six days. The A's sent Baltimore to its seventh consecutive loss and maintained their half-game lead over Anaheim in the AL West.

Tejada, who cried when he drove into the Coliseum parking lot for the first time in more than 10 months, went 0-for-3 in his first trip back to Oakland since signing a $72 million, six-year contract with Baltimore last offseason.

The 2002 AL MVP received a lengthy standing ovation when he came to the plate leading off the second inning, then reached on Eric Chavez's error — snapping a career-high 47-game errorless streak for the Gold Glove third baseman.

Angels 9, Royals 4: In Anaheim, Calif., Bartolo Colon allowed just two singles through the first seven innings and Vladimir Guerrero and Jose Guillen homered on consecutive pitches, helping Anaheim win its sixth straight.

The Angels gave Colon a 9-0 lead after six innings en route to their 14th win in 18 games.

Devil Rays 9, Mariners 0: Scott Kazmir won his major league debut with five impressive innings, and Jose Cruz Jr. hit a three-run homer to lead Tampa Bay to its second victory in 17 road games.

War Is Tough on Families

Military life has enough challenges without worrying about how your loved ones will contact you... especially during times of conflict. I know, because I grew up in a military family and served as a Navy Admiral.

You can count on the American Red Cross to help you wherever you go. Whether you're at sea, or on an installation, we can help your loved ones back home get messages to you, or from you, in case of emergency. We can also help you through counseling and other needed assistance.

The Red Cross was there for my family, and we'll be there for yours. In fact, we support thousands of military families each year.

For more information, or to learn how you can help, please contact your local Red Cross or visit www.redcross.org. Thank you.

Varitek opts to start four-game suspension

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Boston Red Sox catcher Varitek dropped his appeal Monday of a four-game suspension for his part in a bench-clearing brawl with the New York Yankees last month.

Varitek, Boston's hottest hitter this month, began serving his suspension by sitting out Monday night's game against the Toronto Blue Jays.

"It made me sense for us as a team and our matchups," said Varitek, who is hitting .448 in August.

From standpoint it gives the team the best chance to go out and keep winning."

The Red Sox, who entered Monday's game with a six-game winning streak, didn't want Varitek to miss games in early September against A.L. wild card rivals Anaheim, Texas and Oakland. Had Varitek waited until Thursday's appeal hearing, the league would have dictated when Varitek would have been suspended.

Varitek during the suspension. The Red Sox didn't call up a catcher from the minors; they'll use infielder Doug Mientkiewicz as an emergency catcher.

Varitek is hitting .303 with 17 home runs and 63 RBIs this season.

"Nobody wants to lose Varitek, but we were going to lose him at some point," Boston manager Terry Francona said.

The Yankees-Red Sox brawl July 24 at Fenway Park started after Boston pitcher Bronson Arroyo hit Alex Rodriguez with a pitch.

Rodriguez and Varitek scuffled, and several scuffles erupted. Eight players were disciplined after the fight — including five suspensions.

Selig: Major leaguers unlikely to participate in Olympics

CLEVELAND — Don't count on seeing any major league stars in the Olympics while Bud Selig is baseball commissioner.

Selig, who last week received a three-year extension through 2009, said Monday that he declined in the big league season for players to participate in the Olympics without the risk of disruption.

"I don't really see it because you can't stop a pennant race," he said.

Selig, visiting Jacobs Field on Monday, discussed a number of topics, including the Olympics. Capping beginning in 2006 would serve as a substitute for the Olympics.

As for the designated hitter rule, he doesn't see it changing anytime soon.

When one reporter called the American and National Leagues "two different worlds," Selig said: "It's no big deal."

Rivers, Chargers finally reach deal

The Associated Press

CARSON, Calif. — Rookie quarterback Philip Rivers ended his lengthy holdout, agreeing to terms on a six-year contract with the San Diego Chargers on Monday night.

The contract will pay Rivers $45 million, including a $14.25 million signing bonus. He can earn $10 million more in incentives.

Chargers General Manager A.J. Smith said Rivers was driving to the team's training camp from San Diego and was expected to sign the contract late Monday or early Tuesday.

"This is a fair deal for both Philip and the Chargers," Smith said. "We're just happy to have the negotiations behind us and a bright future ahead for Philip, the Chargers and all Charger fans. We're looking forward to getting him on the field and ready for the 2004 season."

Rivers, taken by the New York Giants with the No. 4 pick in this year's draft, was acquired by Chargers in the deal that sent quarterback Eli Manning to New York. Manning was selected by

San Diego with the No. 1 overall pick.

Rivers missed four weeks of training camp and two preseason games.

The 6-foot-5 Rivers is unlikely to get the starting job immediately. In his absence, three-year veteran Drew Brees has performed well and will likely lead the team at the start of the season.

In addition to Brees, the Chargers have three other quarterbacks on the roster, including free agent Joe Germaine and Cole Lerner, the team's No. 3 quarterback last season. Doug Flutie was sidelined after having surgery on his left knee but is now practicing with the team.

He set an NCAA record with 51 career starts and is the second-leading passer in NCAA history with 13,484 yards. He completed 72 percent of his passes last year, with 34 touchdowns.

In four seasons, he threw 95 TD passes and completed 64 percent of his attempts.

Carter signs with Jets

The Associated Press

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Quarterback Quincy Carter signed with the New York Jets on Tuesday, three weeks after his surprising release by Dallas.

Carter, who started every game for the Cowboys last season, was released Aug. 4, before the team's first exhibition game. Reports said he failed a drug test and the NFL Players Association has filed a request for arbitration in the case.

Gene Upshaw, the union's executive director, told the Associated Press that the NFLPA will continue to press the case.

"We have to," he said, adding that part of the grievance involved potential salary loss to Carter.

With the Jets, Carter will back up Chad Pennington, giving the team an experienced second-year starter. Neither of the other two quarterbacks, second-year man Brooks Bollinger nor Ricky Ray, who played in the Canadian Football League, has ever taken an NFL snap.

Carter, a second-round draft choice by the Cowboys in 2001, started all 31 games in which he played for Dallas, including 17 of them — 16 in the regular season and one in the playoffs. In his career, he has 507 completions in 902 attempts for 5,839 yards, 29 touchdowns and 36 interceptions.

Vikings add Ross to CB corps

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — Cornerback Levi Woodson, who left the NFL rookie league in his sophomore two years ago, was signed on Tuesday by the Minnesota Vikings.

New Orleans was the latest team to waive Ross, a third-round pick by Dallas in 2002. Ross started nine games that season and had five interceptions. He also returned kicks.

The Saints let the former Ohio State player go after he missed a play and was injured the next time. He was released by Dallas in December and was signed by Atlanta, where he played two games.

Brian Williams, one of Minnesota's starting cornerbacks, has a sprained knee and may not play in the Sept. 12 opener.

Patriots release FB McCrary

FOXBORO, Mass. — The New England Patriots released veteran fullback Fred McCrary on Tuesday.

Primarily a blocking back, the seven-year veteran joined New England before last season, starting three games before he was sidelined with a season-ending leg injury.

The 6-foot, 247-pound fullback was a sixth-round draft pick of the Philadelphia Eagles out of Mississippi State in 1995.

He signed with the San Diego Chargers in 1999 and started 55 of 63 games in the next four seasons.

In his career, the 31-year-old McCrary has 105 career receptions for 598 yards and six touchdowns.

Raiders don't think Woodson will be ready to play in opener

The Associated Press

NAPA, Calif. — Charles Woodson's holdout will probably keep the four-time Pro Bowl cornerback out of the Oakland Raiders' season opener.

New Raiders coach Norv Turner expressed doubt Monday that Woodson, who is still away from the team, would be able to play when the Raiders start the season at Pittsburgh on Sept. 12. Turner said Sunday that he believed Woodson would be with the team before the preseason ended. But there likely won't be enough time for Woodson to get up to speed with Oakland's new defense in time for the season opener.

"Obviously the longer it goes the harder it is," Turner said. "I've been in situations where a guy came in [and] in a week and could contribute and play. But that was a situation where the guy had been in the same system and knew the calls, knew everything here."

"Obviously when Charles gets here it's going to be harder. It's all new for him."

Woodson, tagged in February as Oakland's franchise player, has been unhappy with his current contract status and is reportedly seeking a long-term deal that would make him the highest paid cornerback in the NFL. He has refused to sign the team's one-year tender that would pay him $8.7 million.

Neither Woodson, his agents, nor Raiders senior personnel executive Mike Lombardi could be reached for comment on Monday.

Turner has said repeatedly this preseason that he expects Woodson to be in uniform when the regular season begins but admitted Monday he has not spoken with the cornerback recently.

Oakland is switching from its traditional 4-3 defense to a 3-4 look under first-year defensive coordinator Rob Ryan, and Woodson has yet to be exposed to it. He did take part in some of the team's offseason workouts or minicamps and has remained at his home in Houston where he was reportedly working out with a private trainer.

While the Raiders wait on their top defender, several other teams lost key players to injuries.

Seattle Seahawks' three-time Pro Bowl linebacker Chad Brown broke his left leg during practice Monday. And Baltimore lost center Mike Flynn, who started all but one game since 2000.

Coach Mike Holmgren said Brown will undergo surgery as soon as possible and is expected to miss at least four regular-season games. He was hurt getting his feet tangled with tight end Itula Mili during a practice drill.

Flynn broke his right collarbone early in the Ravens' practice session. He was part of the unit that helped Jamal Lewis run for 2,066 yards last season, second highest total in NFL history.

New Orleans quarterback Aaron Brooks, who missed the first preseason game, will probably miss the third as well. He re-injured a ligament in the top of his thigh against the Packers. On Monday he was sore and back where he was when he first hurt himself.

Brooks said he doubted he would do much this week to practice or in the game.

"I think it's best for me to rest it and try to get the treatment I need so I can start getting ready for Seattle," Brooks said. "That's right around the corner."

Meanwhile, Vikings receiver Marcus Robinson will miss Minnesota's two remaining preseason games to rest his problematic left hamstring.

Robinson, who signed a four-year, $9.4 million deal in March to be the Vikings' No. 2 receiver, left practice after tweaking the hamstring.

The same injury, officially diagnosed as a strain, forced him to miss nearly half the team's padded practices in training camp, as well as Saturday's preseason loss in Atlanta.

Jaguars running back Fred Taylor will miss Friday's preseason game with Green Bay because of a strained foot, Jacksonville coach Jack Del Rio said Monday night.

"He's got a little strain in his foot. It just needs to calm down," Del Rio said. "It's the kind of pain that will rest goes away. There's no sense in him going out and tweaking that or because he's feeling that, that it would lead to something else that would be a disaster."

"Our goal is to get him ready for [the season opener] Sept. 12," he added.

Taylor has had injury problems throughout his career. He missed 23 games between 1999 and 2001 with various injuries, but has not missed a regular season start the past two seasons.

Bills running back Travis Henry is listed as day-to-day, opening the door for Willis McGahee to get his chance to be the Buffalo starter.

Henry missed practice on Monday with bruised ribs. While Henry's injury is not described as severe, coach Mike Mularkey said he could keep him from playing in Buffalo's preseason game at Indianapolis on Saturday as a precaution.

"It's not official, but I'm not going to push him to play if there's any pain at all," Mularkey said. "I'd maybe have a different answer if we were in the regular season. But I'm not going to push that right now. It's just to get him back full strength."

Both Henry and McGahee have said they want to start. And questions intensified last week when The Associated Press, citing a source close to McGahee, reported the player has asked to be traded if he's not the starter on opening day.

The Bills have maintained that Henry is the starter and McGahee will get his share of carries as the backup.

California reaches U.S. semis

SOUTH WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — Sideline curbsells, regular batters and even some backhanded balls. No matter the direction of the spin, Jordan Brower was nearly unimpeachable.

Brower struck out eight and knocked in the winning run to lead Thousand Oaks, Calif., into the United States semifinals with a 3-1 victory over Lincoln, R.I., in the Little League World Series on Tuesday.

In other games Tuesday: Curacao played Saipan; Canada played Poland; Richmond, Texas, met Preston, Md.; Panama faced Taiwan; and Redmond, Wash., played Owensboro, Ky.

Brower (1-0) settled down after a shaky first inning, retiring 10 straight and looking dominant against a Rhode Island team playing about 12 hours after a 5-4 loss to Morganton, N.C.

Damon Divozi (9) of Lincoln, R.I. advances to second on a first-inning single by teammate Jeremy Rhault as Tyler Karp of Thousand Oaks, Calif., takes the relay throw Tuesday in South Williamsport, Pa. Thousand Oaks beat Lincoln 3-1 to advance to the U.S. semifinals.

"I just came out and threw strikes," Brower said.

Did he ever? Forty-five of his 59 pitches were strikes. Brower walked none and Rhode Island batters in the late innings were taking weak cuts.

Cody Thomson struck out one in the sixth and earned his first save.

California snapped a 1-all tie in the third, capitalizing on some sloppy play. After Rhode Island starter Chris Costantino (1-1) retired the first two batters, he allowed a single to Sean McIntyre. McIntyre advanced to second when center fielder Damon Divozi misplayed the ball.

Pinch-runner Adam Justiniano scooted to third on a wild pitch and scored on Brower's opposite-field single to left.

With two outs in the fifth, Leon singled, but ended up on third after a two-base error by right fielder Steve Ricci. Leon scored on a passed ball, making it 3-1. Costantino allowed three runs — only one earned — and struck out nine in five innings.

In Monday's games:

California 10, Iowa 0: Sean McIntyre struck out eight, then drove in the game-winning run as California (2-0) routed Devonport (Iowa) Northwest 10-0, in five innings. The loss eliminated Iowa (0-3) from playoff consideration.

Mexico 6, Saipan 3: Oscar Garza and Ismael Garcia each hit a home run for Mexico, which finished play 2-1. R-Jay Joe homered for Saipan (0-2).

Curacao 6, Saudi Arabia 1: Jurickson Profar struck out six batters to lead Curacao (2-0) into Wednesday's International semifinal round.

North Carolina 5, Rhode Island 4: Chris Fine hit a two-run homer and Eli Lawson also homered to lead Morganton, Trevor Fuller earned the win, allowing three hits and two runs in four innings. Alex Kay took the loss for Rhode Island.

Taiwan 7, Canada 2: Chao Wei-Sheng and Chen Hung-Ta combined to drive in four runs for Taiwan. Chi-Hung capped the scoring for Taiwan with a two-out solo homer in the fourth inning.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Hockey is back in North America, even if it's only for the 22 days of the World Cup.

Bill Guerin, Brian Rolston and Jordan Leopold scored goals and Brian Leach had two assists as Team USA beat Canada 3-1 Monday night in a World Cup exhibition game.

"It's always big for any team to beat Canada," Guerin said. The United States, which won the previous World Cup tournament in 1996, got off to a slow start but dominated the final two periods. Canada did not get off a shot in the 12:22 of the third period.

"We're three days from skating around by ourselves and being on the bench," Leach said. "You never know what to expect."

After three exhibition games, a rematch Wednesday night against Canada in Ottawa and back in Columbus against Russia on Friday — the United States opens play Aug. 31 against Canada in Montreal.

Bryant case jogs pool moves into spotlight

BY STEVEN K. PAULSON
The Associated Press

DENVER — Residents of Eagle County are a diverse lot — 23 percent Hispanic, 0.3 percent black. Forty-three percent of them are college graduates. And attorneys in the Kobe Bryant rape case would love to know what they are thinking right now.

Summonses went out last month ordering 999 potential jurors from the county to show up for duty this Friday, with opening statements not expected until Sept. 7.

So, how to find an impartial jury in a case that has been in the news for more than a year and included headlines about the accused's sex life and Bryant's hospital exam?

Jury consultant Joseph Rice of the Jury Research Institute in Westlake, Calif., said some jurors might be so turned off by the tawdry details they won't know who to blame and might try to apply their own values to the case. Prosecutors and defense attorneys will try to eliminate those candidates before the trial begins.

"Some may want to blame Kobe and say it must be rape because a normal person wouldn't do this," Rice said. "Others might say 'Look at her, she asked for it.' This trial has layers upon layer of issues."

If convicted of felony sexual assault, Bryant, 26, faces four years in life in prison or 20 years to life on probation, and a fine up to $750,000. The Los Angeles Lakers star has said he had consented to the sex with the woman, 24, at a Vail-area resort last year.

Eagle County residents mirror the nation in some respects: The population is 74.2 percent white, just ahead of the national figure of 69.1 percent, and it is 45.2 percent female (50.9 percent nationally).

But they are better educated than the general public (only 24.4 percent of the U.S. population holds at least a bachelor's degree) and the county's median household income is nearly $62,700 ($42,000 nationally). They have a median age of 31.

Igdi D'Andrea, a jury consultant for Bonora D'Andrea of San Francisco, said recent mistakes in the case may force the judge to allow more questioning of potential jurors.

Among the mistakes: Courtroom staff have twice posted the accuser's name on a state court Web site and the judge lost a battle with the media and released nearly 200 pages of documents from a closed hearing on the woman's sexual activities.

"It's really hard to unring the bell that that bell has been rung, and ask people to forget what they've heard," D'Andrea said.

Both sides are expected to see if potential jurors are prejudiced because Bryant is black and the alleged victim is white and whether they believe a rich basketball player thought he didn't have to play by the rules.

Rice said attorneys are wary about putting women on a rape case jury because they can be hostile or sympathetic. He said women are quick to blame the victim and look for faults, from their dress to their behavior. "Female jurors are the worst for women," Rice said.

Stanley Cup temporarily missing in luggage mishap

FORT ST. JOHN, British Columbia — The Stanley Cup spent Sunday night in luggage limbo. The trophy disappeared during an Air Canada flight from Vancouver to Fort St. John over the weekend when Vancouver airline officials removed it from the plane because of weight restrictions.

Walter Neubrand, keeper of the Cup, was delivering the trophy to Jake Goertzen, head scout for the Stanley Cup champion Tampa Bay Lightning.

As they waited by the baggage carousel, it didn't take long for them to realize something was wrong.

"We were waiting for it to come out," Goertzen said. "Everybody's bag was there, except the Cup."

Air Canada agents checked the plane but there was no sign of the Cup or its travel container. After a call to Vancouver, they learned the 35-pound Cup was sitting in the Vancouver airport's luggage area 750 miles away. It was too heavy to fly.

Air Canada spokeswoman Laura Cooke said the Cup was held in a secured facility overnight and flown to Fort St. John to be "placed in its rightful hands" early Monday. Cooke said the airline is reviewing how the mistake occurred.

Bucks re-sign Kucuk

MILWAUKEE — The Milwaukee Bucks on Monday re-signed forward Tony Kucuk after two productive seasons with the team. Kucuk, acquired from the Atlanta Hawks after the 2002 season for forward Glenn Robinson, averaged 9.9 points, 3.9 rebounds and 3.2 assists per game in two seasons for Milwaukee.

Terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Crew, Sannhe agree to deal

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The Columbus Crew agreed to terms Monday with German captain Tony Sannhe on a multiyear contract.

The Crew were awaiting final international clearance from Sannhe's club in Germany, FC Nurnberg, to complete the deal, team spokesman Jeff Wuerth said.

Ibis Tek GSM Cell Phone Jammer

Model 735TC Vehicle System

Designed specifically with the intent to prevent the operation of cellular telephones from being used as remote detonators for explosive devices. Since GSM does not use paired offset transmit and receive channels the standard sweep frequency jammer are less than 60 percent efficient in preventing a signal from getting through. This unit uses a different waveform to sweep both up and down in frequency in a single cycle and the waveform is repeated several thousand times a second. Additionally the white noise is used to modulate the output waveform with an additional pseudorandom tone that changes frequency 16 times a second and is also sent through the entire bandwidth at several thousand times per second to give the Burzawa modulation that is used in high end military jamming systems.

Features: Disrupts all GSM Cellular frequencies 800-960 MHz and 1800-2100 MHz. Mounts on back of front passenger or driver seat. 100 Meter operational range and connects directly to IEM/OW batteries under seat or in 12V vehicle adapter in other vehicles. Woudshall's operation mount antenna for non-metallic vehicles and magnetic mount antenna for metallic vehicles and SUV's. Operates continuously when connected to vehicle battery power and will not disrupt operation of military radios and communication devices. Internal Power systems are all switching supplies with 90% efficiency to insure a constant power output in the battery voltage range. Kit includes everything you need to get started.

Golden sands for Mays, Walsh

U.S. women blast Brazil in beach volleyball final

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — Misty May and Kerri Walsh made it look easy, even in the end.

The top-ranked American beach volleyball pair defeated second-seeded Brazilians Shelda Bede and Adriana Behar 21-17, 21-11 on Tuesday night, capping the most dominant run in the sport's history with a gold medal.

Earlier, Americans Holly McPeak and Elaine Youngs won the bronze medal, beating Australia's Natalie Cook and Nicole Sanderson 21-18, 15-21, 15-9.

May and Walsh didn't drop a set in Athens, with the 6-foot-3 Walsh dominating at the net and the quick May scrambling and diving for every dig.

On match point in a surprisingly lopsided final, Walsh hammered a spike just inside in the line. Walsh fell to her knees as May ran to embrace her. They raced to the stands and grabbed American flags as "Born in the U.S.A." blared over the speakers at the Olympics' rowdiest venue.

May and Walsh have been gold-medal favorites since last year, when they began an unprecedented 90-match, 15-tournament winning streak.

Medals roundup

The streak ended in June, the week after May pulled an abdominal muscle. May spent most of the summer rehabbing while Walsh continued to hone her game with other partners.

May's injury cast doubt on the pair's Olympic hopes, but they never showed signs of weakness. They were untouchable in Athens, improving to 108-8 over the past two years.

May and Walsh were invited to a post-Olympic party at McPeak's home in California, where 10 bottles of Dom Perignon await.

The toasts will taste especially sweet to McPeak, who finished fifth at the Olympics in both 1996 and 2000, repeatedly set back by injuries to her partner Youngs played on the U.S. indoor team that finished a disappointing seventh in Atlanta. She hit the beach the following year and paired with McPeak in 2002 with Athens on her mind.

The bronze medal completed a historic year for the 35-year-old McPeak, who became the sport's winningest female player with a victory at Manhattan Beach in June.

Cycling

Men's points race: Colby Pearce finished in 14th place as America continued its struggles in cycling.

Mikhail Ignatyev, a relatively unknown 19-year-old Russian, lapped the field four times and finished with 93 points to collect his nation's first cycling gold medal of the Games.

Defending gold medalist and three-time world champion Joan Llaneras of Spain was second, and Germany's Guido Fulst third.

Pearce finished the 24.8-mile race with 23 points. "It was a great experience to be here," Pearce said. "I'm not going to let the fact that I didn't medal ruin that."

Men's sprint: Australia's Ryan Bayley won the gold medal by besting world champion Theo Bos of the Netherlands.

Women's sprint: Lori-Anne Muenzer became the first Canadian to claim a cycling gold medal at the Olympics.

Grip: Hamm fighting to keep gold

That leaves Hamm in limbo.

"It is not my responsibility to deal with it," he said. "My responsibility is to do gymnastics, and it's up to these governing bodies to deal with these matters. For them to put the pressure on the athletes, I think is wrong."

The constant complaining has overshadowed what the athletes have done on the floor.

The Americans won nine medals in Athens, more than they got at the last two Olympics combined. Hamm and his teammates became the first U.S. men's squad to win an Olympic medal since 1984 when they took silver, and Hamm also won silver on the high bar. Carly Patterson was the first U.S. woman since Mary Lou Retton to win the all-around, and she also won a silver on balance beam.

Annia Hatch won silver on vault, while Tim Humphrey and Courtney Kupets won silver and bronze on the uneven bars.

"I knew we could do good here and get medals," Patterson said. "We've done a great job at this Olympics, and everyone should be really proud of themselves."

But what might be remembered most from these games is the judging controversies. The Greeks, Bulgarians and Canadians all questioned some of their scores in the men's competition, and the Russians sent letters Tuesday to the FIG and IOC Presiding Judge Juan Antonio Samaranch asking for scoring that cost Veslana Khorkina a gold medal in the all-around and kept Alexei Nemov off the medal stand in high bar finals.

The furor boiled over Monday night. With Hamm waiting to compete, fans booed, whistled and jeered for 10 minutes to protest Nemov's high bar score. Nemov's score was booted about halfway through the mutiny, to a 9.762, but he still finished fifth.

"We realize that our appeal is unlikely to change final results of competitions. We must draw attention of the International Olympic Committee to the existing problem," the head of the Russian delegation, Anatoly Kolesov, told a Russian TV station, First Channel.

"One must not reconcile with the existing state of affairs."

But gymnastics is a subjective sport with human judges, USA Gymnastics President Bob Colarossi said — judges get things right more often than not, but there will always be the chance of mistakes.

There's a view that the judges have the floor that you have respect," Colarossi said. "You have to stand by the decision that are made on the field of play. You absolutely have to. If you don't, the competition will never end and you open everything up to speculation."

See you in Beijing.

Injury forces world champ Pappas out of decathlon

BY BOB BAUM

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — What had already been a bad Olympics for decathlon world champion Tom Pappas got worse Tuesday when he injured his left foot in the pole vault and withdrew from the competition.

The injury occurred as the American ran down the runway in his first vault attempt — at 15 feet, 1 inch. Pappas ran through to the pit, then walked to a nearby grassy area and sat down.

He pulled off his left shoe and sock, then ripped through tape and began rubbing the bottom of his foot.

Pappas left the infield to have the foot rewrapped, then returned and began testing the foot, first in running shoes, then in spikes. He passed on the next height but decided not to continue after talking to coaches.

Pappas, in fifth place through seven events, put his poles away, grabbed his gear bag and limped off the field. After about an hour in the medical treatment room beneath the stadium, he left.

He limped out of Olympic stadium with U.S. multi-events coach Ralph Lindeman, declining to talk to reporters.

But in a lengthy statement released by USA Track & Field, Pappas said the foot already was bothering him but got much worse on his aborted vault attempt.

"I was trying to run more on the outside of my foot and not worry about the pain," he said. "But one particular step I got a sharp pain. It wasn't right ever since that jump. I got it retaped and did some strides, but the pain was getting worse."

Dr. Ed Ryan of the U.S. Olympic Committee said Pappas had an acute strain of the left foot.

Staying in the competition was not an option, Lindeman said.

"He barely wouldn't have been able to take off to the extent that he could have cleared a height, let alone plant his foot in the javelin or run 1,500 meters. It was just too much pain," the coach said.

An American of Greek heritage, Pappas was expected to be a star of the Athens Games. A Greek bank paid for his family to come to Athens to watch him compete.

But he struggled in the long jump and high jump Monday, citing a lack of confidence, and was almost certainly out of medal contention when he withdrew.

Pappas said on Monday that he had no serious injuries, just a few minor aches and pains.

However, he said the arch of his foot was stiff when he woke up Tuesday, and he underwent lengthy treatment before beginning the second day of competition.

"After the warmups, I started feeling a little better," he said. "But on my last hurdle rep at the practice track, it started hurting."

The long wait between the discus and pole vault didn't help, he said.

"It was one of those things where it wasn't getting any better," Pappas said.

After being upset by Bryan Clay in the U.S. trials, Pappas split with his longtime coach Bill Webb to work with Brian Brophy and Kip Janvin.

"I had high expectations coming into the meet," Pappas said.

"But more than anything I'm worried about my foot."

U.S. decathlete Tom Pappas injured his left foot in the pole vault and was forced to withdraw from the competition Tuesday.

Hayes sets Olympic mark in 100 hurdles

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — Joanna Hayes was the surprise gold medalist in the 100-meter hurdles after favorite Perdita Felicien tripped over the first hurdle and did not finish the race Tuesday night.

Hayes screamed, raised her arms in the air and then covered her mouth in shock after crossing the finish line first in 12.37 seconds, an Olympic record. She then fell to the track before running to the stands to accept congratulations.

Olena Krasovska of Ukraine won silver in 12.45 and Melissa Morrison of the United States was third in 12.56.

The old Olympic record of 12.38 was set by Bulgaria's Yordanka Donkova eight years ago.

Track and field

Felicien, a Canadian and the reigning world champion, hit the first hurdle and stumbled into Russia's Irina Shvaychenko — sending both sprawling to the track. Felicien walked off in disgust, then sat on the track and watched with a grimace as Hayes and Morrison took a victory lap wrapped in American flags.

Women's 400 meters: Tonique Williams-Darling of the Bahamas won the gold in 49.41 seconds, beating world champion Ana Guevara of Mexico.

Guevara ran a season-best 49.56 for silver, while Russian Natalya Antyukh took bronze in 49.89. The United States was shut out of a medal, one night after sweeping to victory in the men's 400.

Men's 3,000-meter steeplechase: Ezekiel Kemboi led a Kenyan sweep, winning gold in 8 minutes, 5.81 seconds.

Brimin Kiprotto got silver in 8:06.11, and Paul Koech won bronze in 8:06.64. Kemboi waited for his countrymen at the finish line, and the three embraced.

Kemboi won silver in the world championships last year after misreading the lap counter, thinking there were two laps remaining instead of five. He also plays forward on his local soccer team.

Men's 200 quarterfinals: Justin Gatlin, aiming for the Olympic sprint double after winning the 100, easily cleared the first two heats of the 200, along with the other two Americans.

Hungarian stripped of gold medal in men's discus for doping violation

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — The Hungarian gold medalist in the men's discus was stripped of his title Tuesday for failing to provide a drug test sample in an apparent attempt to beat the screening system.

Robert Fazekas, who won the discus on Monday night with an Olympic record throw of 232 feet, 8 inches, was disqualified from the competition and expelled from the Games by the International Olympic Committee executives board.

He is the second athlete in two days to lose a gold medal for doping. Russian shot putter Irina Korzhennikova's gold was revoked Monday after she tested positive for doping.

In another case Monday in the drug-tainted Games, Belarusian high jumper Aleksey Lesnichy was kicked out after testing positive for the steroid clenbuterol, the IOC said. He failed to clear a height in Friday's qualifying round.

Fazekas never got to wear the gold medal because the award ceremony wasn't held until Tuesday night. The title went instead to Lithuania's Virgilijus Alekna, who had finished second with a throw of 229 feet, 3 inches. Another Hungarian, Zoltan Kovago, was bumped from bronze to silver. Fourth-place finisher Aleksander Tammet of Estonia moved to third.

Greek judo champion dies two weeks after fall

ATHENS, Greece — A member of the Greek judo team who fell from her third-floor apartment balcony following a quarrel with her boyfriend has died.

Eleni Ioannu had been hospitalized in critical condition for more than two weeks.

The Red Cross hospital said Ioannu, 20, died in the intensive care unit where she had been treated since Aug. 7 for multiple fractures to her head and body.

Ioannu, a competitor in the 172-pound-plus class, fell from the balcony after an argument with her boyfriend, 24-year-old Giorgos Christodimitrakidis.

Police questioned Christodimitrakidis and released him. Relatives and neighbors said he was inconsolable, and jumped from the same balcony two days later. He remains hospitalized in critical condition at Athens' Evangelismos hospital.

Tremor felt in Athens

ATHENS, Greece — A small earthquake rattled some Olympic venues Tuesday. There were no reports of injuries or damage.

U.S. men draw toughest test

Undeclared Spain awaits Team USA in quarters

BY CHRIS SHERIDAN
The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — When a day of drama had ended and the quarterfinal pairings were set, the news was not great for the United States.

In order to get to the semifinals and possibly the gold medal game, first the U.S. will have to defeat Spain — the team that led the widest wake of impressed and defeated opponents during the preliminary round.

"I don't know anything about that," Tim Duncan said of Spain after the Americans cruised past Angola 89-53 to finish the opening round with a record of 3-1. Here's the scoop, Timmy: The Spaniards have finesse yet are physical, they're led by an NBA player who's tougher than he looks, and they usually shoot three-pointers the same way your teammates do — not all that well.

Spain's players had an opportunity Monday to take it easy against New Zealand, lose a game and thereby knock Serbia-Montenegro out of medal contention. Instead, they banged bodies as though it was a wrestling match, won by four points and left Serbia-Montenegro self-destruct later in the day, when China defeated the defending world champions 67-66 and advance to the quarterfinals while relegating Serbia-Montenegro to the 11th-place game against Angola.

Thursday's other quarterfinals match Lithuania-China, Italy-Puerto Rico, and Greece-Armenia.

Forward Pau Gasol, who plays for the NBA's Memphis Grizzlies, averaged 16.2 points and 7.6 rebounds a game for Spain (5-0) in the preliminary round.

"We went out and tried to get the victory for the respect of the competition, the respect of our rivals and the respect of ourselves," Spain coach Mario Pesquera said. "There's also another important factor: When you have a winning streak like we have, it's a little dangerous to break it."

Spain (5-0) won all of its tuneup games before the Olympics, and the Americans would be ill-advised to underestimate them.

"Spain dominated our group," New Zealand coach Tab Baldwin said. "I think any team going against Spain has probably got to be considered an underdog."

The Americans are likely to learn that you can't spell "Spain" without "pain."

In a game marked by hard fouls and confrontations, Spain's Carlos Jimenez made two free throws for a four-point lead with 12.4 seconds left after an intentional foul on New Zealand's Dillon Boucher, who violently threw Jimenez to the floor.

The intentional foul allowed Spain to retain possession, and the four-point lead was key as Pau Gasol — who plays for the NBA's Memphis Grizzlies — missed a pair of free throws with 9 seconds left.

The Americans' game couldn't have been more different.

Duncan scored a team-high 15 points in only 13 minutes, and the U.S. dominated the boards in Barcelona-style with a 52-17 edge in rebounding.

"The only negative, I thought, was we turned the ball over a lot (12 times) in the first half, which has plagued us a lot in this tournament," coach Larry Brown said.

The U.S. lost to Puerto Rico and Lithuania in the opening round and defeated Greece, Australia and Angola. Under point differential tiebreakers, the U.S. finished fourth in its group behind Greece (3-2) and Puerto Rico (3-2).

"I'm really confident in the way we've been playing," Duncan said. "We wish we could have won some more and played better against Lithuania and all that good stuff, but we didn't, and we're in the position we're in right now, and we're happy with where we're at."

Cuban super heavyweight Jason Estrada, right, receives a blow from U.S. boxer Michel Lopez Nunez during the quarterfinals at the Peristeri boxing hall in Athens on Monday. Lopez Nunez won the match. Only two boxers from the nine-member U.S. team are still competing.

USA boxing team taking a beating

Estrada pummeled in lackluster effort

BY GREG BEACHAM
The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — Jason Estrada shrugged his shoulders and attempted to convince his questioners that an embarrassing Olympic loss was no big deal.

His coach stared at the ground a few feet away, pondering everything that's wrong with U.S. amateur boxing.

Cuban super heavyweight Michel Lopez Nunez pounded Estrada 21-7 in their quarterfinal bout Monday night, leaving just two U.S. fighters alive in the nation's worst showing in the Olympics in 56 years.

Estrada's collapse was the latest disappointment for coach Basheer Abdullah, who arrived in Athens hoping to restore the American program's reputation. The United States' one-time dominance of Olympic boxing has eroded due to inexperienced teams, computer judging standards and the lure of pro contracts.

Perhaps Estrada already had dollar signs in his eyes when he started slow and got slower in the biggest fight of his career.

Despite Abdullah's warnings against timid starts, Estrada seemed reluctant to mix it up with Lopez Nunez.

The American team's fastest boxer eventually resorted to holding — a strategy that garnered boos, but certainly not a victory. With six seconds to go, Lopez Nunez broke Estrada's embrace and shoved him limply against the ropes.

The 261-pound Estrada was finished, and he didn't seem to care — a fact he confirmed a few moments later.

"If I'm going to lose, I'm going to lose getting hit as little as possible," said Estrada, from Providence, R.I. "I'd rather not get hit at all. This is long-term. This is just one part of my life. There's a lot more boxing to go."

Along with most of his teammates, Estrada will turn pro soon. He fancies himself a future heavyweight contender — but to Abdullah, the coach of the U.S. Army's boxing team, Estrada doesn't sound like a champ.

"It discouraged me. I'm disappointed that he had that type of attitude," Abdullah said. "Somehow we have to find a way to make athletes take pride in representing the United States. (Heavyweight contender) Vassily Jirov said it best: Our biggest enemy is our money."

"When you've got somebody offering you a pro contract, that blinds you from representing your country and taking pride in it. Think about it: You're taking a kid out of the ghetto and offering him X millions of dollars (instead of the pride of representing the United States) Come on."

On Sunday night, American heavyweight Devin Vargas cried after losing his quarterfinal bout on a sprained left knee. Seven Americans have lost in the past six days, but only Estrada claimed to be unwounded.

Light heavyweight Andre Ward and middleweight Andre Dirrell — generally considered the team's best fighters — are the only U.S. boxers left.

On Tuesday, Ward pulled a big upset, beating two-time world champion Evgeny Makarenko of Russia 23-16.

Even if Dirrell also advances against one of the nine Cubans remaining in the draw, the Americans will win only two medals — their lowest total since London in 1948. The U.S. has never failed to leave an Olympics with at least one medal.

"We may make history the opposite way we wanted to make history," Abdullah said. "Right now we're on the brink of not taking any medals here."

U.S. women's basketball team finally should see a crowd at game vs. Greece

BY CHUCK SCHOFFNER
The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — The U.S. women's basketball team will see something different in its next game.

Fans. Fans and lots of fans. Noisy, boisterous fans waving flags, clapping and stomping on their feet. And almost all of them cheering for the opponent.

When the Americans play Greece in the quarterfinal of the medal round Wednesday, they'll be the visiting team in the truest sense.

"They're in their own country and you can add 10 to 15 points on top of what they're going to do," Dawn Staley said. "You have to be ready for the crowd. We know they're going to play really well and beyond what they usually play."

Even that probably won't be enough to sideline a U.S. team focused on winning a third straight Olympic gold medal. But it could make things a little more challenging for the Americans.

Boisterous Greek fans turned out in huge numbers when their teams played in the preliminaries at the Helliniko Indoor Arena, which seats about 12,000. Now there will be room for even more of them because the remaining games are at the 19,250-seat Olympic Indoor Hall.

"These people love their sports and love their country, so it should be a lot of fun," Diana Taurasi said.

Fun for the United States comes from winning, and that's all the Americans have done so far. They romped through the preliminary round, winning their five games by an average of 29 points with dominant inside play and aggressive defense that produced easy baskets from steals and turnovers.

Not many folks have seen their show, however, at least in person. The biggest crowd for a U.S. game was 2,000. The game with the Czech Republic drew a paltry 954. Taurasi's Connecticut teams used to draw bigger crowds for pickup games.

"I thought the crowds would be a little bit bigger but, for the most part, I think they're being great," Taurasi said. "As the games get more important, I think more people will start coming out."

The games certainly are more important now — Jose Wednesday and the hope of a medal is kaput — and with Greece playing, the place should rock.

Team USA's Diana Taurasi, right, was accustomed to playing in front of larger crowds at UConn than the United States' preliminary round games in Athens.

"I think the atmosphere is going to be great, not only for Greece, but also for USA Basketball," Yolanda Griffith said. "But we can't get too high or upset by the crowd. This is their home crowd, so we have to keep our momentum and not let the crowd get to us and just execute offensively like we're capable of doing."

The U.S. softball team lifts coach Mike Candrea after winning the gold medal on Monday.

Dominant U.S. perhaps detrimental to softball

ATHENS, Greece — Down to possibly its last strike at the tender age of eight, Olympic softball suddenly has a new problem: An American Dream Team that can't find any anyone to swing with.

Sound familiar? Like the U.S. men's basketball squad did in 1992 in Barcelona, the softball team overwhelmed the competition at these Games. The Americans outscored the field 51-1, doing it with poise, precision and pop never seen before.

"It's going to be tough to match what they did," Australian coach Simon Rusk-vist said after the U.S. claimed its third straight gold medal with a 5-1 win over the Aussies on Monday. "But now it's up to the rest of the world to get after them, and that's going to be a challenge."

If not for the Aussies scoring a run in the sixth inning of the final, the U.S. team would have put up nine zeros in nine games — a perfect Olympics. The Americans broke virtually every team record, tied others and set individual marks in offensive, defensive and pitching categories.

They were as dominant as any team, in any sport, at any time.

"This team got it done," said pitcher Lisa Fernandez, who now has three gold medals and might go for a fourth in Beijing. "Our game never changed because of what the scoreboard said."

That is a problem.

Two years ago, the International Olympic Committee recommended softball be dumped from the Olympics in 2008. The reasons: The U.S. team was too dominant; Europeans didn't play softball or understand it; games were too long; there was little scoring and minimal media coverage.

The International Softball Federation countered by moving back the pitcher's mound 3 feet, the fences 20 feet and instituting the eighth-inning tiebreaker in which teams begin their at-bat with a runner at second base — all changes designed to bring competitive global balance.

The ISF also challenged the IOC's scrutiny by pointing out that softball is played in 124 countries, gets consistently higher TV ratings than other sports and has never had a doping problem.

Softball is safe for now, guaranteed a spot through '08. After that, golf or rugby could take its place inside the rings.

Sadly, this U.S. team may have hurt softball's future. The other softball-playing nations are trailing the Americans — badly.

"It's hard to imagine being really good at something as being a bad thing," said catcher Stacey Neuvman, who hit one of the U.S. team's three home runs against Australia. "In our country, in our culture, the goal is to be the best you can be."

"If that's bad, then shame on the world," ISF President Don Porter said having a U.S. super team is a mixed blessing.

"There is a concern, certainly, but I don't want to take anything away from what this team has accomplished," he said. "We have to work harder to help other countries develop their softball programs, and we're doing that in many ways."

Porter said the ISF has given equipment to send to nations such as China, Russia and North Korea, handing them the tools needed to get up to speed with a U.S. team clearly above the rest.

Because right now, there is no other player like Natasha Watley, the U.S. team's leadoff hitter who wrecks havoc with her slap singles and speed. There is no power hitter like America's Crystl Bustos, who launched two home runs in the gold medal game, including a 330-footer.

And there is still not a better player on the planet than Fernandez. She went 4-0 and batted .545 in her third and best Olympics, driven by a desire to help ease the pain for U.S. coach Mike Candrea, whose wife, Sue, died on the eve of the Games.

The world has shown it can catch up. In '92, it seemed impossible to think it would ever happen in basketball. But the U.S. hoopers may not win a medal in Greece. Other countries learned how to shoot and pass a leather ball better.

Now, they have to figure out how to hit a smaller, yellow one.

U.S. seeks fitting finale for women's soccer vets
Americans to play Brazil for gold

BY JOSEPH WHITE

IRAKLION, Greece — Julie Foudy left the game with a limp, and then the stadium on crutches, her spunky attitude nearly as big as the bandage wrapped around her sprained right ankle.

"I think I'll just have them chop it off, and I'll drag my stump out there if I have to," the captain of the U.S. women's soccer team said.

Nice try, but unless the ankle heals in a hurry, the Fab Five will be without a key member Thursday when they play for the gold medal.

Foudy's injury was one of several head-smacking developments late in a game that had been going the Americans' way. After giving up a last-gasp goal and blowing an easy scoring chance in overtime, the U.S. team finally beat World Cup champion Germany 2-1 Monday night on Heather O'Reilly's goal nine minutes into the extra period.

The win gives the Fab Five — long-standing stars Mia Hamm, Jory Fawcett, Brandi Chastain, Kristine Lilly and Foudy — a chance to go out as champions in their final tournament together.

"The whole year it's kind of been our focus," said O'Reilly, the youngest player on the roster. "What these women have done for the last 10 years has been remarkable, and this is it for some of them. As young players, we wouldn't be happy putting them out with anything but a gold."

The Americans face an interesting reverse: The whole year it's kind of been our focus, said O'Reilly, the youngest player on the roster. "What these women have done for the last 10 years has been remarkable, and this is it for some of them. As young players, we wouldn't be happy putting them out with anything but a gold."

"What these women have done for the last 10 years has been remarkable, and this is it for some of them. As young players, we wouldn't be happy putting them out with anything but a gold."

Brazil's coach accused the U.S. team of deliberately trying to hurt his players in a 2-0 loss week in the first round.

Germany will play Sweden in the bronze medal game.

Even though the young players on the U.S. team had spoken of their mission to send the veterans out on top, the vets themselves and coach April Heinrichs had downplayed the topic because they felt it put unnecessary pressure on the team as a whole.

Then, in an unexpected twist, Heinrichs raised the matter in her locker-room speech before kickoff against Germany. Her voice cracked with emotion as she repeated her words following the game.

"It's fitting for these players to go out on top," Heinrichs said. "We owe it to them."

Hamm, for one, was caught off guard. She had genuinely tried to stay focused on each game as it came, without thinking of how close she was to the end of her career.

"I had an emotional reaction," Hamm said. "Because you don't want it to be your last game. You're kind of putting it out of your mind, and then someone just puts it front and center."

The speech sure didn't hurt. The Americans dominated most of the game and were lucky they didn't win it in regulation. The Germans' tying goal came on a shot from Isabell Bachor that deflected off Fawcett's hip two minutes into second-half injury time.

O'Reilly then had an open net in front of her early in overtime, but she rushed her shot and hit the post. A few minutes later, she scored the game-winner, a 6-yard right-footed shot with an assist from Hamm.

It was an appropriate pass from old to young, from a 32-year-old retiring player to a 19-year-old college student who was screaming Hamm's name as a fan just a few years ago.

"Her love for this game, and her love for this team, inspires us old bags a lot," Hamm said.

Hamm created the goal by moving in from the right flank, which drew the German defense her way. She said the maneuver was a result of studying tapes of last year's 3-0 loss to Germany in the World Cup semifinals, a sour defeat that had lingered on the Americans' minds all year. Germany went on to win the Cup and entered the Olympics ranked No. 1 in the world, a place the United States had held for so long.

Afterward, exhausted from 120 minutes of soccer, the Americans started to regroup. One more victory is needed to complete the Fab Five mission.

"It's not over," forward Abby Wambach said. "These women more than anybody know that."

U.S. upset on last-second goal in women's water polo semis

BY JOHN PYE

ATHENS, Greece — Manuela Zambelli scored with two seconds left to give Italy a 6-5 upset victory over the world champion Americans on Tuesday in the semifinals in women's water polo.

The Italians advanced to the finals against Greece, a 6-2 winner over Australia, later Tuesday.

The United States will face Australia for bronze in a rematch of the Sydney 2000 final won by the Aussies.

"It was very shocking," said American Brenda Villa, part of the silver-medal squad four years ago. "I really thought we could hold them off. Our goal was the gold medal, but that's gone. We came here for a medal and we must finish that — only now it's for bronze."

The U.S. team went into the semifinal quite confident because it beat Italy in the world championships last year.

The Americans were leading this game 4-2 after three periods. The Italians rallied with two goals from Tania di Mario and another by Giusy Malato to move ahead 5-4.

Ellen Estes pulled the Americans even with 1:11 left, but Zambelli was left wide open to score from the left of the goal.

U.S. coach Guy Baker was seething about a call in the last minute, when the Americans were penalized for an offensive foul.

He didn't comment on the decision, but said the result was devastating for his team.

"It's the Olympics. I think you should be really excited when it's all over, or you should be crushed — we're crushed," he said.

Gymnastics losing its grip

Competition ends with boos, whining over disputed gold

BY NANCY ARMOUR

The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — American Paul Hamm is heading home, and he's taking his gold medal with him.

The South Koreans are still looking for someone to give them a duplicate medal to make up for the scoring error that cost their gymnast in the men's all-around. Not to be outdone, the Russians are lodging general protests with anybody who will listen, and some who won't.

Yes, the gymnastics competition may be over at the Athens Olympics, but the whining might keep going all the way to Beijing.

"Truly in my heart, I believe that I am the Olympic champion. I don't feel as if I should be giving the medal back or another one should be awarded," Hamm said Tuesday before heading back to the United States.

"I enjoyed a lot of the Olympics," he added. "But once the controversy hit, I've been very stressed out."

No wonder. Hamm had one day to savor his accomplishment of being the first U.S. man to win the Olympic all-around title, winning with one of the most spectacular comebacks the sport has ever seen.

Then the International Gymnastics Federation admitted that its judges had made a mistake, giving Yang Tae-young a 9.9 start value for his parallel bars routine when it should have been a 10.

Yang finished third, 0.049 points behind Hamm, who came back from 12th with two events left for the victory. But add in that extra 0.100, and Yang would have finished first and Hamm second.

Kim Dae-eun of South Korea would have won the bronze instead of silver.

FIG apologized for the mistake, and suspended the two judges who determined the start values — Benjamin Bango of Spain and Oscar Buitrago Reyes of Colombia — along with the judge who oversaw the panel, George Beckstead of the United States.

Paul Hamm waited 8½ minutes for a booing crowd to quiet down before performing his silver medal-winning high-bar routine.

But it could do nothing else, FIG President Bruno Grandi said.

"I don't have the possibility to change it," Grandi told The Associated Press. "Our rules don't allow it."

Which means forget about those negotiations between the South Koreans and the U.S. Olympic Committee, which said Monday it would be "willing to consider the notion" of a second gold medal. The International Olympic Committee won't go near that idea unless FIG requests it.

That leaves the South Koreans empty-handed, and still looking for satisfaction. They want a duplicate gold medal for Yang, and promised to take their case to the Court of Arbitration for Sport.

But they still hadn't filed an appeal as of Tuesday night.

"We don't have any updates today," said Jae Soon-yoo, an official for the South Korean delegation. "I can't give you a timeframe."
